8,000 Scouts in Drive; Vichy Pretense Ending? Argentine Faces 'Freeze'

The World's Day—July 1, 1944

Boston: Scouts Seeking More War Bond Pledges

Approximately 8,000 Boy and Girl Scouts of Greater Boston today are conducting their "clean-up drive" for War Bond pledges for the Fifth War Loan. [Page 5.]

At Fort Devens, Mass., more than 100 veterans of Anzio, Cassino, the Southwest Pacific and the Persian Gulf passed through the receiving station here and were en route home today under the Army's rotation program.

Boston will observe Independence Day with a complete, all-day round of patriotic events, it was announced today by city officials. [Page 5.]

Europe: Germans May Wipe Out Vichy Pretense

Germans in France may wipe out the last pretense of Vichy independence, according to Madrid reports which say a process of liquidation of Vichy's functions is under way in meetings between collaborationists and their German overlords.

Albanian collaborationist government headed by Rexhep Mitrovica has fallen, according to Italian dispatches. Reasons are not given.

Union of Polish Patriots, in Moscow, denounced the London Polish Government in exile, sharpening the rift between the emigre government and the Soviet-sponsored Polish groups.

Russia's Supreme Soviet issued a decree today empowering inhabitants of the Western provinces of White Russia and the Ukraine to adopt Polish citizenship.

Gen. Charles de Gaulle in the course of his trip to the Italian front visited the headquarters of the Fifth Army, where Gen. Mark Clark presented him with an American decoration.

Finland received America's note breaking diplomatic relations from the hands of Edmon Gillard, U. S. Charge d'Affaires, at 6 p. m., June 30. The Finnish public heard the news with disappointment and pain.

Franktek Nemeš, Czechoslovak Minister of Reconstruction and Commerce, has been appointed government delegate to the liberated territory of Czechoslovakia, Reuters reports.

Cross-Channel shipping from England to Eire, which had been halted as a precautionary step just before the invasion, is expected to be resumed within 10 days, London reports.

Washington: Argentine Fund Freeze Looms

Freezing of Argentine funds was under consideration in connection with information from official sources that the Government of Argentina has been giving direct aid to German firms on the United States black list. [Page 3.]

Corporations and other nonbanking investors have exceeded their $10,000,000 quota in the $16,000,000 Fifth War Loan drive, the Treasury announced. Sales to these investors through June 29 totaled $10,151,000. Sales to individuals, however, continued to lag. This total reached $3,184,000, or 53 per cent of the quota.

President Roosevelt signed legislation boosting the pay of expert Army infantrymen. It gives a $5 monthly increase to foot-soldiers not in combat areas and $10 to those in combat groups, provided they meet qualifications set up by the War Department. In addition, those qualifying will receive a special medal. The legislation does not apply to the Navy or the Marine Corps.

Mexico: Foreign Minister to Visit Washington

Mexican Foreign Minister Ezequiel Padilla leaves Mexico City today for Washington as the guest of the United States Government, invited to discuss relations between the two countries. The Foreign Minister will go by train, accompanied by Primo Villa Michel, Chairman of the Mexico-U. S. Commission for Economic Co-operation, and several other officials. He will be in Washington from July 6 to 12.

Penrods and Sams of 1944 Held Key 'Men' in Air Training

By Theodore N. Cook

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, July 1.—The Penrods and Sams of 1944 have come into their own recently, with the United States Army Air Forces designation of these tousle-haired 17-year-olds as the key men in its new combat air crew training program. And let there be no doubt about it, the "kids" are enjoying the experience of being sought after.

Waiting on rows of chairs at the Army Air Forces Examining Board in the Grand Central Palace induction center here, the youthful air crews of tomorrow reassure each other and rescant their application forms and birth certificates with a newly discovered seriousness that would undoubtedly amaze their parents.

For the Air Forces is staking its future on these young men. Under the new combat crew procurement program if you are over 17 the Air Forces won't take you for flight training. And under recently inaugurated Army regulations shutting down transfers, applicants who are accepted under this new program are certain of remaining in the Air Forces.

10 Buy Barber Shop

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

PATERSON, N. J., July 1.—Ten men, weary of waiting for the call "next!" when they visited their favorite barber shop, have clubbed together and bought the shop, and will continue the former proprietor, Joseph Russak, as exclusive ministrant to their shaving and hair-cutting needs, on a salary of $40 weekly.

The agreement runs for the duration, and specifies that the group shall pay the rent of the shop, maintenance, and equipment, and that Mr. Russak shall have the privilege of buying back his business after the war. He is happy over the deal, as he won't have to work so hard, he has been unable to hire assistants, and has found it difficult to serve his tenuous trade, clamoring for attention. Now he is concerned only with his priority customers.

Intimate Survey Of Rubber Drama

Soldiers in the battle for wild rubber production may not wear uniforms, but they face dangers and hardships in parts of South America comparable to those of front-line troops.

Writing of firsthand experiences in some of the most remote rubber regions, Roland Hall Sharp today gives an intimate view of what it takes for Rubber Development Corporation technicians to bring in indispensable wild rubber for war uses.

This is the third installment of a roundup on rubber achievements and inefficiencies, in the series on "Uncensored South America." First Page, Second Section.

Dewey Plans Climactic End For Campaign

By Roscoe Drummond

Chief of the Washington Bureau of The Christian Science Monitor

ALBANY, N. Y., July 1.—Gov.

Thomas E. Dewey of New York is rapidly shaping his political strategy as the Republican Party's presidential nominee, and already three major decisions affecting the shape and character of the campaign are well advanced.

These decisions, still to be confirmed by the top command of the campaign organization, have Mr. Dewey's own support, and, on good authority, can be put as follows:

Governor Dewey plans to act on the political tactic of the "long pause." He is not going to attempt to keep his name in the headline news continuously; in fact, he believes it better to do the opposite without any effort to maintain political interest at high pitch.

Second, he favors and is prepared to conduct the shortest presidential campaign in American political history. He intends to start late and fight hard without letup, once he begins.

Governors to Aid

Finally, there is every prospect that the 26 Republican governors with whom Mr. Dewey has been closely associated during the past two years, will play a large and significant role in the campaign. They frequently may act collectively to support the G. O. P. ticket and they may work in teams. It will be something new in national campaigning.

All three of these approaches to the task of electing a Republican President this fall will make Mr. Dewey's campaign considerably different from that which Wendell Willkie conducted in 1940.

Mr. Willkie was on the front page almost daily from the hour of his dramatic nomination. Mr. Dewey hopes to keep out of the headline news most of the time for the next two months, at least. It will be easier for him to do this than it was for Mr. Willkie because he can concentrate on the day-to-day routine of the Governorship. But his plan for the "long

Russian Army in Outskirts of Minsk; Great Tank Battle Impends for Caen; Nazis Risk Defeat in East to Hold West

Transfer of reserves shows Hitler expected only token attack from Soviet Army.

The Week at War

By Joseph C. Harsch

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

In Europe this week Germany succeeded in bringing its Italian retreat back under some semblance of control and in matching the build up of the Anglo-American Army in Normandy.

But that these feats were accomplished only by straining every muscle and by calling up every ounce of reserve strength was plainly testified by a shattering defeat on the Eastern Front, where Russian armies drove forward in probably the most spectacular advance of the entire war.

The meaning was plain. In the West, where Germany planned an aggressive "offensive-defense" this summer, it still was managing to avert catastrophe and still was managing to hold its own, although by a narrow and perceptibly diminishing margin. But in the East, where it planned to stand on the defensive, a shattering disaster had come.

This, one week after the opening of the main Russian attack, it was clear that the scales of war already had been tilted past center in favor of the Allied cause.

One Central Purpose

An early end was by no means certain. The German High Command clearly had one central purpose and it was bending all its energies to it. That purpose was to repel the invasion force now solidly established in Normandy. It began taking desperate risks to this end.

Large forces were moving toward Normandy, not only from Eastern France but also from Germany. There was reason to suspect that the troop trains which British bombers sought on their way through Saarbrücken and Metz and Blainville had begun their journey to the east of even Germany itself—troops withdrawn from the already too-thinly-held Russian front for the crucial battle of the West.

It was not yet certain that the three extra divisions sent into Italy the week before would in the end weaken the invasion front. That stiffening in Italy checked the retreat which from Rome to Lake Trasimeno was very nearly a rout. It continued to be a retreat, but it was a controlled retreat as attested by the straightening of the line. With a few breaks, the Germans still had a chance of getting most of their Italian armies back to the Alps where, in theory, half of the total then

One report, as yet unconfirmed, says Minsk has been surrounded.

Monetary World Looks To Bretton Woods Parley

By George Erlison

Editor of Financial Pages of The Christian Science Monitor

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., July 1.—The eyes of many Americans are being focused today on this small community where hundreds of money experts from more than 40 countries are gathered to discuss with American authorities measures that are calculated to meet postwar international money problems, more particularly exchange stabilization. On the agenda too, is a proposal for a $10,000,000,000 world bank for reconstruction and development, patterned after the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The conference will convene late in the day to hear a message from President Roosevelt, to name Treasury Secretary Henry Morgenthau its president and to chart the course of discussions.

Interest naturally attaches to the type of financial leadership that will be drawn together in this unusual meeting. No complete list is available of all the delegates, though a number of countries besides the United States have announced their representatives. Britain will have an imposing

New England Rails Hum To Heavy Holiday Travel

A full three-day holiday, which loomed ahead today for thousands of Greater Bostonians as large department stores and many other business establishments planned to remain closed July 3, began to tax the carrying capacities of rail, bus, and air lines early today.

Although most transportation-company officials expressed the belief they could accommodate those leaving the city, some doubted that facilities would be adequate to care for the mass return on July 4, when those less fortunate ones who have to work July 3 will have joined the three-day week-enders.

Certain trains, notably the streamlined "Mountaineer," to the White Mountain region of New Hampshire, have had all their reservations sold out for the past month, with long lists of hopeful persons waiting to pick up last-minute cancellations. Pullman travel, in general, is heavy. And, as the Office of Defense Transportation has pointed out, an entire Pullman car may be taken over by the Army at any time to transport wounded soldiers.

Coach Travel Urged

But inasmuch as New England resorts can be reached comfortably on a coach train, the railroads serving these areas have felt that vacationists should, in so far as possible, do their traveling on Underground rises in Copenhagen—Heavy casualties reported in fight for Saipan.

By the War Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

From Associated Press And other direct news dispatches

Red Army troops are in the outskirts of Minsk and a German army is staggering back between the Dvina and Berezina Rivers in what may be one of the most decisive retreats of the war. The British Radio says the White Russian Capital has been surrounded and leading rail and highway links with Warsaw severed.

The Germans seem to have been overwhelmed at every point. Company after company is being decimated. Moscow says 132,000 Germans have been slain on the White Russian front since June 23.

The situation is singularly reminiscent of July, 1920, when the Red Army launched an offensive in the same area against the Poles. Marshal Pilsudski described the Russian attack at that time as "an unceasing wormlike advance of a huge enemy horde" which "gave us the impression of something irresistible, rolling up like some terrible thunderclouds that brooked no opposition. The pressure of this rolling thunderstorm broke the joints of the machinery of state, weakened all our characters, and took the heart out of our soldiers."

In the face of an offensive of such proportions, it is difficult to see how the Germans can hope to make a stand anywhere short of the Riga-Brest-Litovsk line, or perhaps even the shorter Mamel-Brest-Litovsk line. Terrain east of these natural defensive positions does not lend itself to effective delaying actions. If the Germans do fall back to such an extent, they will have to give up the Baltic states, including Finland, which Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop has just blandly promised to save from the Russians.

Three Soviet armies appear to be converging on Minsk from the northeast, east and southeast. North of the vital bastion, other Soviet forces have apparently outflanked Polotsk in a drive for Latvia and Lithuania. To the south, a third Russian force continues to push toward Baranovitz.

Far behind the eastern battle lines, the Germans have had to go on the defensive in a new sector of the Underground front. Reports reaching Stockholm indicate German troops have had to take possession of public buildings in Copenhagen as a general strike of Danish workers continues. Fighting is said to be in progress in Copenhagen streets.

In Normandy, where the greatest tank battle in history may be developing for Caen, the British Second Army continues to stand firm on the Odon River after repulsing attacks by elements of the seven panzer divisions the Germans are estimated to have in Normandy. Evidently Marshal Rommel, who is said to be in direct control of operations, is trying to use his tanks to strike sudden knockout blows as he did in Libya. General Montgomery is vigorously countering this effort with the use of overwhelming air power.

In the Pacific, the bitter fighting on Saipan still holds the spotlight. The American front line now roughly divides the island at the administration center of Garapan. The extent of Japanese resistance is indicated by Admiral Nimitz's announcement that American casualties total 9,752.

British Supply All-Out Aid for U. S.

By Neal Stanford
Staff Correspondent of
The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, July 1 — Britain's reverse Lend-Lease, reported this week to be in the neighborhood of $2,000,000,000, covers a multitude of activities and a host of opportunities to hasten and perfect the Allied war effort.

Foreign Economic Administrator Leo T. Crowley's fairly detailed report June 29 broke down British reverse Lend-Lease aid into four categories: goods and services transferred in the United Kingdom, those transferred outside the Kingdom, shipping services, and construction of airports, barracks, hospitals; but British sources here disclose innumerable specific ways in which the aid is being supplied to American forces.

Very briefly, and just as an idea of what British Lend-Lease aid includes, these sources disclose that such help ranges from providing bicycles for airmen to especially printing 100,000 pinocle cards for the United States Army, from handling American soldiers' V-mail to giving American servicemen free tickets for London theaters.

Following are some details of special fields in which the British have extended aid to the United States via reverse Lend-Lease:

1. Housing and bases. A $600,000,000 construction program that at its peak used two thirds of Britain's civil and military labor available for building barracks, camps, houses, hotels, offices, hospitals, airfields, hangars, and workshops. Over 2,000,000 tons of construction material have been poured into this building program.

The total cost of all Britain's airfields, including those used by the RAF as well as the United States Army Air Forces, amounts to about $2,500,000,000. Of this sum $472,000,000 has gone for airfields, camps, and depots for the United States and the total cost to the United States has been only $40,000,000.

2. Transport. British ships, including those leviathans the Queen Mary and the Queen Elizabeth, have carried thousands of American troops to all parts of the globe. British convoys frequently guard these troopships. United States warships and merchant ships get free fuel, services, supplies, and repairs in British ports all over the world.

3. Bicycles. For safety reasons hangars and barracks are generally at considerable distance from

Universities Open Doors to Americans

By a Staff Correspondent of
The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, July 1 — Short university leave courses are included in the educational program provided by Britons for American servicemen. The courses originally started at Oxford.

One-year courses are given the year round at Balliol College. Classes usually consist of 30 Americans, 30 Canadians, and 15 Britons. Oxford's most distinguished professors give the lectures. Cambridge, London, St. Andrews, Birmingham, Bristol, Edinburgh, Glasgow and Reading Universities have similar courses.

each other. At the request of American air crews and despite the great civilian demand for them, more than 25,000 bicycles have been provided American fliers and thousands more have been contracted for.

4. Food. Britain, despite the fact that it has had to import large amounts of foodstuffs for its own population, has provided American forces in Britain with approximately 20 per cent by weight of its food supply. This includes 56,000,000 pounds of potatoes, 2,000,000 pounds of jam, and 36,000,000 pounds of sugar.

Also Britain requisitioned for American use a co-operative society bakery which with new equipment produces 50,000 pounds of bread a day. Mobile bakeries that bake bread in the field also have been provided.

5. Office Work. There's a lot of bookkeeping, office work, and the like that Britons are providing American forces. Some 10,000 British civilians, whose wages amount to about $12,000,000 a year, are working for Americans and being paid by the British.

6. Military Equipment. While most of the arms used by American troops are American-made, some are provided free through Lend-Lease by the British. Mr. Crowley mentioned in his report this week 1100 Spitfires. He could also have mentioned thousands of bombs ranging from incendiaries to blockbusters, 1,000,000 anti-tank mines, millions of rounds of collapsible rubber dinghies, and much anti-submarine defense gear. Britain also has supplied all the maps used by the United States Army and Air Forces in or based on Britain and most of the maps used in the Mediterranean area.

7. Americans. Britain is producing millions of five-gallon gasoline containers for use by the United States Army. These are called "Ameri-cans" to distinguish them from the containers used by the British which are called "Jerri-cans." These containers can be carried by hand and withstand extreme climatic conditions.

8. Medical Supplies. Almost 90 per cent of the medical supplies of the United States Army in Britain are provided through British aid. In addition, hospitals have been turned over to the Americans and ambulance trains provided.

9. Clothing. More than 5000 different items of clothing are supplied American forces by the British under Lend-Lease. These include nearly all the items of officers' uniforms, footwear, socks, gloves, underwear. Laundry and boot repair service also has been provided.

10. Post exchange supplies. More than 80 per cent of the United States Army's PX stock is supplied by Britain. This includes shaving cream, razor blades, toothpaste, brushes, hair tonic, handkerchiefs, playing cards, flashlights, mirrors, nail files, etc.

11. Entertainment. British bands and theatrical parties tour American camps regularly. American servicemen in London have received more than 30,500 free tickets to the theater. Thousands of phonograph records, sheet music, and amplifier equipment have been provided the Americans by the British.

12. Telephone Service. The British Post Office supplies its services to United States forces free. These include telephone and teletype services and telegrams and cables to all parts of the world. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower's headquarters has the largest telephone hookup in Britain. The switchboard has 52 units and 100 British girls handle the enormous traffic. It is located in a bomb-proof basement.

13. V-Mail. The British Post Office handles the incoming V-mail for American troops. It picks up the finished prints from a British firm and then British women operating machines fold the letters at the rate of 30,000 an hour. Other machines stick the envelopes and print the postmarks at the rate of 10,000 an hour. Approximately 25,000,000 V-mail letters from the United States to American soldiers have been handled and all costs paid by the British.

14. Training and Education. Well over 3,000 United States airmen have completed RAF courses. Members of the United States Navy have received training in anti-submarine warfare at British bases. Merchant marine gunners have taken instruction under the British Navy. In nearly all British schools, including the Staff College, American soldiers have attended courses. British Army training movies are available to United States forces. Then there are civilian lecturers, correspondence courses that the British have provided for the Americans.

Columbia Awards 70 B. A. Degrees At Ceremony Without Academic Garb

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

NEW YORK, July 1 — Seventy recipients of the degree of bachelor of arts were presented with diplomas at an informal wartime commencement of Columbia College held yesterday in the Men's Faculty Club of Columbia University.

Dean Harry J. Carman of Columbia College presented the diplomas and welcomed parents and friends of the graduates at the first commencement ceremonies of this war to be held without academic dress.

Thomas S. Rock of Leominster, Mass., won the Alumni Prize, awarded annually by vote of the student body, to "the most faithful and deserving student of the graduating class."

Thomas L. Dwyer of Glens Falls, N. Y., was given the Edward Suttif Brainerd Memorial Prize, an award made annually to "that student in the graduating class of Columbia College who is adjudged by his classmates as most worthy of distinction, on the ground of his qualities of mind and character."

Everett J. Roach of Stoughton, Mass., was presented with the Charles M. Rolker, Jr., Prize, which is given to the member of the graduating class in Columbia College who, in the judgment of his classmates, has proved himself most worthy of special distinction as an undergraduate student.

Lester J. Martens of Weehawken, N. J., received the Columbia Lion for leadership, a prize awarded by a committee of Columbia College Alumni.

William E. Drenner of Memphis, Tenn., was given the Charles A. Bjorkvall Memorial Prize as that member of the graduating class considered by fellow students to have been most unselfish in his service to the College community.

Joseph G. Barata of Trenton, N. J., won the Richard H. Fox Memorial Prize for his contributions to the welfare of the College through nonathletic activities.

Influx of Refugees Hit by Reynolds

WASHINGTON, July 1 (AP)—Senator Robert R. Reynolds (D) of North Carolina, chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, said June 26 that Attorney General Francis Biddle has advised him the proposal to bring 1,000 refugees to the United States does not involve setting aside immigration laws.

Senator Reynolds said President Roosevelt had suggested placing the refugees in an abandoned military camp in New York State. He wrote Mr. Biddle asking on what ground the President and War Refugee Board could "set aside the immigration laws."

Mr. Biddle replied the refugees are not being permitted to enter the United States under the immigration law and will have no right to remain in this country after the war.

"While this 1,000 is just a drop in the bucket," Senator Reynolds said, "it means the eventual influx of hundreds of thousands and once they get here they will never be returned."

Brashares Named Bishop By Methodist Conference

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 1 (AP)—The Rev. Charles W. Brashares, pastor of the First Methodist Church in Ann Arbor, Mich., June 30 was elected a Bishop of the Methodist Church at a meeting of the Methodist Central Jurisdictional Conference.

A native of Williamsport, Ohio, in 1891, the Rev. Mr. Brashares is a graduate of the Boston University School of Theology and served as pastor in Gorham, Maine, Newton, Mass., and Dayton, Ohio, before assuming the pastorate of the Ann Arbor church in 1934.

While Other Tasks Are Neglected

A. M. A. Platform Still Opposes Sickness Insurance Measure

By Dorothea Kahn
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

CHICAGO, July 1—Continued opposition to compulsory sickness and hospital insurance, together with support for voluntary insurance plans, is expressed in the revised platform of the American Medical Association. This platform, approved by the House of Delegates of the organization here recently is effective as the policy of the organization.

The platform affirms the fundamental that "medical care of a high quality" should be made available to "every person in the United States," but urges that this be done so far as possible by private enterprise, and, where public aid is needed, by local units of government rather than Federal.

Revision of the platform does not indicate any change in the basic position of the A. M. A. in the six years since the original platform was adopted. But the Council on Medical Service and Public Relations of the Association, which made the revision, declares that the explanatory matter in the platform needed to be amplified and brought up to date.

In so doing, no mention is made of the Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill which would include compulsory Federal health insurance in the Government's social security program. But the statement goes thoroughly into the issues of that bill and offers a number of points which contest the claims of the bill's sponsors.

"In the United States today our sickness and death rates are lower than those of any other great country in the world," says the platform. "This fact is generally recognized. The medical profession recognizes the importance of doing everything possible to prevent every unnecessary death. At the same time, it has not been established by any available evidence that a change in the system of medical practice, which would substitute a salaried government doctor for the private practitioner subject to the control of public officials, would in any way lower the sickness and death rates."

Good Record

"Compulsory sickness insurance in no instance has given as good a health record as the American system."

In contrast to American experience, the A. M. A. platform considers that of countries which have experimented with government insurance.

"Careful study of the history of the development of medical care in various nations of the

Russian News Tops Dewey Victory In Stars and Stripes Italian Edition

ROME, June 30 (AP)—The Army newspaper Stars and Stripes, in the edition published for troops here, presented accounts of the Republican National Convention to American troops in Italy, with the nomination of Gov. Thomas E. Dewey losing top play yesterday to the Russian offensive. Today, however, the Republic drew top play over all war news.

Stars and Stripes stories of the convention proceedings were supplied through the Army News Service.

There was no editorial comment, because Stars and Stripes is without an editorial column.

Governor Dewey's nomination was carried under a three-column head in the middle of the first page below a map of the Russian front.

Capt. William Murphy in charge of the Army News Service office in New York, said A. N. S. filed approximately 2,000 words each day on convention proceedings to Mediterranean editions of Stars and Stripes with possibly more than that on the day of Governor Dewey's nomination.

He said the manner in which stories were played in the various editions was entirely up to the editors of the various editions.

Master Sergeant Ben Price, New York bureau correspondent for Stars and Stripes in the European theater of operations, said he had filed approximately 4,000 words daily during the convention to Stars and Stripes published in that

Argentine Aid To Nazi Firms Irks Treasury

WASHINGTON, July 1 (AP)—Information from official sources that the Argentine Government has been giving direct aid to Nazi firms on the United States blacklist boosted the freezing of Argentine funds to top spot yesterday in discussions of what may be done next to express disapproval of the course Argentina has taken.

The Treasury is known to have the machinery ready for blocking the funds, awaiting only the order to put it in motion.

Blacklisted firms have prospered in Argentina in many cases, officials said, because Argentina has failed to apply measures taken in all the other hemisphere republics and because the Argentine Government has supported those firms.

Since the blacklist has been extremely effective against Axis companies in the other countries, the Germans use their Argentine branches to collect profits, send aid and information and keep Nazi firms going in the rest of the hemisphere, it was disclosed.

Following examples of Argentine support to blacklisted firms were cited:

1. The Argentine Navy placed a contract for 100 radios with Siemens-Schuckert, a blacklisted contracting firm, and obtained for this company an American-made radio to use as a model.

2. The Argentine Government attempted to obtain newspaper from this country for Nazi-subsidized newspapers and when that failed, ordered domestic paper producers to turn to the manufacture of newspaper for them.

3. The Argentine Government obtained by its own purchase steel from this country which it turned over to German contracting firms.

At the Rio de Janeiro conference in January 1942, and later that year at a special meeting in Washington, Argentina agreed with the 20 other American republics to take necessary steps against Axis aggression, including economic warfare, in this hemisphere.

New Service Bar For Army Personnel

WASHINGTON, July 1 (AP)—A service bar was authorized for Army men June 30 to indicate each six-month period of service overseas. A similar decoration was used in World War I.

The bar, to be worn on the left sleeve, is a four-inch rectangle of cloth with gold-colored edging, worn just above the cuff. Service for the award will be computed from the date of departure from the continental United States to the date of return, during the period from Dec. 7, 1941, to a date six months after termination of the war.

The bar is in addition to ribbons designating service in individual theaters.

Rescued Army Fliers Prepare for Duty Call

GRAND CANYON, Ariz., July 1 (AP)—Three Army airmen who successfully weathered an epic nine-day test of courage on a rugged Grand Canyon plateau prepared today to return to active duty at Kingman, Ariz., Army Air Field.

They were feted last night at fashionable El Tovar Hotel near the Canyon's south rim after a 10-mile trip up a hazardous trail from the tableland on which they landed by parachute in early morning June 21.

Two of the men—Second Lieut. Charles Goldblum, Pittsburgh, Pa., and Flight Officer Maurice J. Cruikshank, Jr., Lawrence, Mass.—related they had reached the plateau only after landing on a precipitous ledge below it and clambering upward. Later they found Roy W. Embanks, Kalispell, Mont., who managed the safest landing in the darkness.

Radio Looms Big In Briton's View Of Postwar Trade

LONDON, July 1 (Reuter)—The British radio industry will occupy a conspicuous place after the war, declared Hugh Dalton, President of the Board of Trade, today.

"The British radio industry has defeated all the wiles of the enemy in this war," Mr. Dalton stated, "and will occupy a very conspicuous place in the turning over of industry generally from the achievements of war to the achievements of peace."

"We must export not less than 50 per cent more in terms of value than we did prewar, if we are to obtain a sufficiency of things like tobacco, cotton, wool and other things," Mr. Dalton added, "the radio industry would contribute much more than 50 per cent."

Bathing-Laundry on Convoy Require High Degree of Skill

By William L. Worden

ABOARD A CONVOY TO SAIPAN, June 12. Delayed. (AP)—Out here convoys are bigger, longer, duller and much hotter than in the European war.

Most of the men on this ship, for example, have been aboard for many days now, and we're not at Saipan yet. At first reading, that may not sound too bad—a cruise, with nothing much to do, among story-book islands under a bright blue sky.

But these men are living in the holds, i.e., on iron cots strung from the overheads, four deep, with a passage about two feet wide between the rows. A cot is a piece of canvas strung from an iron frame with a depression in the centers as a memento to the fat man who had it last trip.

The hold has a ventilation system of sorts, but something always happens. If some bright lad doesn't hang his shirt over the outlet, somebody above decks invariably clogs the inlet with his laundry or himself.

Bathing aboard Pacific transports everywhere but goes on longer. That is, there never is enough water. Some ships run water to showers and wash bowls for half an hour, twice a day. With luck and pushing a man can shave about every other day.

This ship has no limit on water hours (which makes it unusual) but solves its limitation problem with special shower heads containing only a few very small holes.

People in the tropics think about water a lot.

Transport rules vary according to the ideas of skippers. All of them black out their decks at night, but one blacks out completely, above and below. No lights burn anywhere aboard except dim red bulbs, so no one reads, plays cards or writes letters after dusk. Dull, that's what!

At one time, sun bathing was commonly prohibited, but experience has changed this rule. Now officers and men sun themselves on transport decks religiously—and on order.

Tricks in Laundry Service

Laundry, like everything else, takes on a different importance on this trip than on one of a few days as in the European theater. Generally speaking, ship laundries can do nothing for passenger troops, little for their own people.

Traditionally, sailors drop a bucket overside for salt water, haul it up, scrub dungarees on the deck. Marines frown on so much work, simply tie their clothes tightly to a long line, toss it overboard and let the clothes dangle in bow waves of the ship, bouncing merrily up and down. The Marines claim they get their clothes cleaner with less effort—if they don't lose them.

Enlisted men's mess is reduced to essentials—men stand in line with trays, take their food cafeteria style and carry it off somewhere to eat it while it is still hot. Transport officers try to maintain the old traditions of wardroom service. This gets a little tough when the wardroom, built to seat 70, has to feed three times that many.

C. I. O. Test in Bay State Due in July 11 Primaries

By John Bond
Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

One of the clearest tests of the strength of the Congress of Industrial Organizations Political Action Committee in Massachusetts will come in the Third Congressional District contest in the July 11 Democratic primaries where Representative Philip J. Philbin of Clinton, the incumbent, is being opposed by P. Eugene Casey, of Milford, P. A. C. endorsed candidate, in a two-man contest.

Defeat of Mr. Philbin has been marked by the P. A. C. in Massachusetts as its No. 1 goal.

The Massachusetts C. I. O. News, official organ of the C. I. O. in the State, has charged Mr. Philbin with failure to support the administration in 10 out of 17 chances.

"Among the measures he has opposed," the News stated, "were rent control, the $25,000 salary limitation, subsidies to keep down the cost of living, rolling-back prices, enforcement of ceiling prices, and fair income taxes."

The Clinton man, whose political career is generally believed to have been guided strongly by Senator David I. Walsh, charged that the calculated campaign of the C. I. O. group is "part and parcel of a world-wide scheme to install international Communism in every nation on earth."

Philbin's Attack in Record

In remarks placed in the Congressional Record, Mr. Philbin said: "Inspired by international Communists, revolutionary Socialists, Syndicalists, and an assorted variety of social reform crackpots, starry-eyed dreamers, dangerous un-American radicals, and other diverse subversive elements, the C. I. O. Political Action Committee has instituted a campaign in the coming election to take over the control of the Government of the United States."

"The Communist technique predominates in all the activities of this group and aims to reduce all members of the Congress to the status of servile rubber stamps. No holds are barred. No rules are followed. No ethics or honor respected. . . . Over 90 per cent of the House of Representatives is under attack by P. A. C."

Mr. Philbin, a former Secretary to Senator Walsh, was elected to Congress in 1942, succeeding former Representative Joseph E. Casey, who ran for the United States Senate.

Considered a member of the Walsh-Ely faction, Mr. Philbin has frequently been hostile to the present Administration.

Support of the Administration, labor and international co-operation is the measure set up by the C. I. O. in endorsing candidates in this year's elections.

Casey's Public Career

Mr. Casey, the C. I. O. candidate in the Third District, served six years as a State Senator where he established a pro-labor vote record. He favored a state wages and hour law, a state fund for workmen's compensation, and free tuition at Massachusetts State College for young people from low-income families.

Mr. Casey was defeated easily by Mr. Philbin in the primaries two years ago when eight candidates were in the field. With 2,121 votes he was second, however, to Mr. Philbin, who polled 4,040 votes. More than 5,000 votes were scattered among the remaining six candidates.

Lively Campaign Due

On the Republican side Wilfred P. Bazinet, of Webster, former member of the Massachusetts House and Senate, appears to have an edge over Carroll H. Balcom of Clinton who was runner-up to Mayor Alfred Woolcott of Fitchburg in the G. O. P. primaries two years ago.

Mr. Bazinet's French extraction is expected to weigh heavily with the Franco-American voters, of which there are many in this district. A political showman, Mr. Bazinet, who defeated P. Eugene Casey for the State Senate seat in 1938, can be counted on to conduct a lively campaign. He served three terms in the Massachusetts House.

Colonel Balcom, who describes himself as a "soldier, author, diplomat, and gentleman farmer," is a native of Massachusetts and a lawyer. He has campaigned twice, unsuccessfully, for Congress and points to his extensive experience

Boston Negro Leads Army Florida Unit

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

CAMP GORDON JOHNSTON, Florida, July 1—The distinction of being the first Negro officer to command a Station Complement Unit in the history of the Army Service Forces Training Center at Camp Gordon Johnston goes to Capt. James B. Gibbs of Boston, the War Department reported today.

Captain Gibbs, a graduate of Northeastern University in civil engineering, has been named Commanding Officer of Headquarters Detachment, Headquarters Section No. 2. He received his commission as second lieutenant upon the completion of the senior Reserve Officers' Training Corps course at Northeastern. Appointed a reserve officer in November, 1938, he was called to active duty in February, 1942, at Camp Lee, Va.

A native of Boston, Captain Gibbs received his early education at a private academy in Panama City, Panama. In addition to his work at Northeastern University, he also is a graduate in naval architecture of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Captain Gibbs was senior engineer computer for the Massachusetts Geodetic Survey before his call to active duty. He also was assistant ordnance inspector, Boston Ordnance District, and performed duties as junior naval architect at the Boston Navy Yard.

The Bostonian was promoted to first lieutenant in May, 1942, and received his present rank in October, 1943. His previous Army assignments include tours of duty as supervisor of motor training at Hampton Institute, Virginia; motor transportation officer at Fort McClellan, Ala., and assistant professor of military science and commanding officer of the Signal School, Army Specialized Training Program at the Agricultural and Technical College, Greensboro, N. C.

Brookline Wants Servicemen to Vote

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Town Clerk. Mr. Shinnors, who as a member of the Special Legislative Commission on Primary and Election Laws, has much to do with drawing up the "soldier vote" legislation in Massachusetts, is stressing the desirability of having next of kin register and apply for ballots for their men and women in the armed forces as provided under the liberal Bay State law.

The Town Clerk's office has already received requests for ballots from 612 servicemen and women, Mr. Shinnors reports.

This week, after carefully checking the Brookline military and naval voting list, Mr. Shinnors dispatched a letter to the next of kin of every unregistered serviceman advising them how they may register for the one in service.

Must Apply Promptly

To families of servicemen who have registered for them but have not requested a ballot to be sent, Mr. Shinnors dispatched another letter advising them to apply for a ballot not later than Aug. 1 to insure delivery of the ballot on time.

The Town Clerk also checked the town's Honor Roll against the voting list to find those who were too young to be registered when they left but who will be legally of age Nov. 7. To their families was another letter from Mr. Shinnors explaining how they might register for the member in service.

Although the Federal Government has guaranteed to deliver an application for a ballot to every man and woman in the armed forces on Aug. 1, wherever he or she may be, Mr. Shinnors believes the safest way to assure delivery is to have the request come from the folks at home.

Safeguard Against Loss

The mail sooner or later will get to the application in transit. To each of the 612 servicemen who have already written for a ballot Mr. Shinnors wrote this week acknowledging receipt of the request.

Soldiers who have not received their State absentee ballot by Oct. 1 will be provided with a Federal ballot to be delivered by naval and military authorities which will permit their voting in the national election, but will preclude their voting on State and local contests.

It's Mr. Shinnors' intention that every Brookline man and woman be permitted to vote on all contests of interest to them.

American Airlines Adds Three Daily Trips to New York

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Three daily round-trip air schedules between Boston and New York are to be added to American Airlines' schedules effective today, W. Nelson Bump, New England traffic manager of the company, has announced.

The new departures from Boston will leave Logan Airport, East Boston, at 9:05 a. m., 1 p. m., and 3:05 p. m., the company said. One of the new round trips will operate nonstop to New York, making a total of six now operated daily. Another trip will operate via Hartford, Conn., and the other will operate via Providence, R. I.

Made possible by planes recently returned to the air line by the Government, the new schedules bring the total up to 17 daily round trip flights between Boston and New York, as compared with 10 operated prior to May 1, the company said.

 ## Germany Under Allied Blitz Described by American Girl

By Pearl Strachan
Staff Writer of
The Christian Science Monitor

A naive, first-hand description of Germany under the Allied blitz came today from an American girl just enrolled at Radcliffe College for the summer term. She is Sybilla Knauth who returned to her native New York on the Gripsholm on March 15. Her father, Theodore Knauth, formerly a commentator for NBC in Berlin, happened to be in America when Pearl Harbor was bombed. He is now working for the American Red Cross, in Washington.

The German civilians are very defiant about the bombings, in fact they are "getting tough," said this charming young person, whose apple-blossom freshness and bubbling spirits remained unimpaired after internment in a concentration camp, followed by residence in Leipzig during the raids which reduced the city to "a mass of ruins."

"I think the people will resist," she said. "The point where they might have collapsed has gone by." The letters which British women in the concentration camp received from home might, she added, have been written by any of the people living in bombed cities of Germany. The will to carry on was evidently comparable.

'Got Rather Numb'
Once the raids begin, she explained, "you get rather numb. You haven't enough sleep and you are always listening for the alert, but if nothing new happens you do your daily work automatically. The hard thing to stand is the unexpected. The people in Leipzig are not Germans or even Nazis any more, just human beings fighting for their lives; they're not concerned any more with politics."

Life in a concentration camp as an enemy alien she found more comfortable than it was as a civilian, among German civilians. That is, as far as food went. Caught in Germany when war with America was declared, she and her mother and two sisters lived as usual for six months, though she had to discontinue her studies at the University of Leipzig, and the money supply from America was cut off.

The German people, among whom she has lived since she was 13, gave them very little trouble. A few of the officials were very impolite, but on the whole they were unharmed. She and her sisters were readily given employment, due to the extreme labor shortage, and her job, for an art publisher, was not connected in any way with the government.

Taken to Berlin
In September, 1942, the members of the family were taken to Berlin, put in jail for half a day, with other American women, then transported by rail to a little town near Lake Constance. They had all pictured a grim camp with barbed wire, she recalled, and were relieved when, on walking from the station to their place of confinement, they found it was a convent with a flourishing farm of its own. The nuns who ran the farm served their meals. As civilians the family had been obliged to manage on severe rations. At Liebenau Camp the food situation was an improvement. For breakfast they received bread, marmalade and coffee. Mid-day dinner consisted of a slice of meat with gravy and vegetables. Supper of potatoes or bread and margarine, and coffee. Parcels from the American Red Cross were "wonderful—just like Christmas." There was "real American chocolate" in them, Miss Knauth recalled gaily. On Fridays, when the parcels were distributed, the "swapping business" began. The Americans had a habit of swapping coffee for tea with the British prisoners.

Narrow Escape

Col. Mary Booth of the Salvation Army, the daughter of the late General Bramwell Booth, was in the camp at that time, but left by exchange of prisoners, for Palestine. It will be remembered she had a narrow escape from the German firing squad and eventually arrived home, in London.

The Americans read P. G. Wodehouse aloud in the evenings and enjoyed the stories, but the British women frowned upon the books. In November the family was released from the camp and returned to Leipzig, to experience the blitz which followed in 1943. "We were very much involved in the bombing business," the girl reported. Her sister's boss, a lawyer, lost his house and business premises in a bombardment and used the Knauth dining room as an office. Half of Knauth house burned down in the raid of Dec. 21. In what was left of it, the family of four occupied two rooms and invited a homeless family of five neighbors to use the other two rooms. Now Miss Sybilla is eager to return to her studies, especially to chemistry, and make up for the time lost since she left Leipzig University.

Serious July 4th Celebration Urged

HARTFORD, Conn., July 1—Issuing a special proclamation, Gov. Raymond E. Baldwin recently called upon all residents of Connecticut to celebrate the Fourth of July with dedicated seriousness this year.

He asked that citizens "join in giving humble and hearty thanks for the victories won; in prayers for those who have borne the strife and for their loved ones" and to ask "for God's guidance in our aims and for His blessing upon our efforts."

Special religious and patriotic ceremonies have been arranged to be broadcast over a statewide radio hook-up from the Hall of Flags in the State Capitol from 10:30 to 10:55 a. m. on the Fourth of July. The exercises have been arranged by the Governor's Unity and Amity Committee and Connecticut's Joint Committee for the United Celebration of Independence Day.

Fishing Fleet Grows as U.S. Returns Craft

Log of the Port of Boston

Return of 23 vessels to the fisheries in Boston, Gloucester and New Bedford, after being granted "honorable discharges" from the Navy, Army or other Government services, in addition to Federal authorization to construct 113 new fishing craft in Maine and Massachusetts during 1944, holds promise of substantial relief to the sharply curtailed productive capacity of the New England fleet, in opinion of spokesmen for the industry in Boston.

Throughout the country, 877 new fishing vessels have been authorized during 1944, of which 39 were trawlers. And 120 of 600 fishing vessels requisitioned for use of the armed forces, have been returned throughout the nation, according to the War Shipping Administration. The release of the fishermen has been possible by construction of special type craft for the war work.

Vessels returned to Boston are the trawlers Hekla, and Lark, and druggers Alvan T. Fuller, Elvira Gaspar, Rainbow and Weymouth. Returned to New Bedford are the New Bedford, Newfoundland Viking and Wamsutta. Those returned to Gloucester are the Babe Sears, Colombo, Edith L. Boudreau, Gertrude L. Thebaud, Jennie & Lucia, Leretha, Magellan, Phillip & Grace, Satan's Wife, St. Anthony, Superior and Theresa M. Boudreau.

The trawler Lark has been chartered by the Cape Cod Trawling Company to the Booth Fisheries Corporation, and is back in active service. The craft was refitted for fishing at East Boston, and boasts a new model radio direction finder and radio telephone. The trawler Hekla has been taken over by the Belmont II. Of the Gloucester vessels returned, the Gloucester, Colombo, Babe Sears, Magellan and Theresa M. Boudreau have been returned to active service in the fisheries.

Seamen's Club

With 52,712 lodgings registered at the Seamen's Club of Boston during 1943, that organization completed what it terms the most momentous year in the 50 or more years of service to seamen at the Port of Boston by the Episcopal City Mission, according to the annual report of the Club, recently issued.

The lodgings registered included men from 13 seagoing services of the United States and United Nations, including Navy, Coast Guard, Army, Merchant Marine, trainees, and Air Force of Great Britain and of Australia. A total of 561 ships were visited during the year; 15,000 magazines distributed; 16,800 pieces of baggage checked; 35,000 pieces of seamen's mail received; $123,491 worth of Travelers' checks and money orders sold, and $100,000 held for safekeeping.

Traffic Club

Help and encouragement of the 1,000 active members of the Traffic Club of New England, composed of men engaged in the field of transportation throughout New England, have been pledged to the newly organized Women's Traffic Club of New England, according to Thomas F. Williams, President of the "godfather" club of the new organization for women.

Mr. Williams points out that the women forming the new club do not claim to be pioneers in forming an association of this character, but that they "are the first to see the need and importance of forming a traffic club for the benefit of women throughout the six New England states who are engaged in work pertaining to traffic in railroad, steamship, airplanes and industry."

He forecasts progress and success for the new club and invites "the clubs in New Haven, Hartford, Bridgeport and Springfield to join with them and become a part of an outstanding organization formed to further the interests of women in the field of transportation."

Port of Boston

Latest edition of the Port of Boston book of the Maritime Association of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, numbered 15, and dated June 1, 1944, has just been issued. It lists rates, rules, regulations and practices in effect at the Port of Boston, as well as such facilities of the port as can be described under war-time restrictions.

Fort Returns

Retired from active business a few years ago, Gerrit Fort, widely known railroad and transportation official and a figure of importance in port of Boston affairs, is back in Boston again, after being in Florida for some time. He has just been re-elected Chairman of the Board of the Boston Tidewater Terminal, Inc. He was formerly President of the Mystic Terminal Co., Boston, and Vice-President of the Boston and Maine Railroad.

Stockdale Named

Appointed to succeed Walter V. Kramer as general freight agent in New England for the Canadian Pacific Railway, Harry Stockdale, who served the company 21 years, has been named for the position. Headquarters are at 150 Causeway Street, Boston. Mr. Stockdale was general freight agent in New York until late 1942 when he entered the Army.

'Honor-System' Newsstand

By a Staff Photographer

Commuter Drops Coins and Takes Paper Herself

This newsstand at the corner of Washington Street and Commonwealth Avenue is an innovation in the pay-as-you-take system of newspaper distribution launched by the Reservoir and Coolidge Corner News Companies in Brighton and Brookline, Mass. Its V-shaped top is intended to catch the coins even when commuters are in a hurry, a departure from the flat-top stands which collect a daily assemblage of coins that get lost in the shuffle. The companies now have some two dozen of these boxes located at convenient trolley stops.

Public Again Shows Honesty In Unattended Newsstands

A modern adaptation of the old-time American business custom of laying out merchandise in a conveniently located public place and trusting to the inherent honesty of the customers to deposit the money for the goods they take is found to be operating successfully for two newspaper distributing companies in Brighton and Brookline, Mass.

In a reapplication of the "honor system" which is as old an American tradition as Plymouth Rock, the Reservoir and Coolidge Corner News Companies have set out some two dozen unattended newsstands at trolley stops along Commonwealth Avenue and Beacon Street.

On the theory that the customer is not only right, but he can also be counted upon to be honest, coin boxes are attached to the stands with some surprising results. Not a few I. O. U.'s are found from customers who took the papers but didn't have the money handy. Other notes express apologies for not paying on time and saying that the difference will be made up later. Still others note that they are taking the papers and will pay at the end of every week in full.

Old Business Custom

"It's just a new application of an ancient American business custom that has its roots in the old country stores where customers help themselves and write out their own credit slips behind the counters," said Norman Norris, Manager of the Reservoir News today. "As a matter of fact, we are only proving once again that the average consumer is inherently honest."

The two dozen unattended newsstands, covering every trolley stop from Lake Street along Commonwealth Avenue to Washington Street, and from Cleveland Circle along Beacon Street to St. Marys Street, have lately been augmented by a newly designed box at the corner of Washington and Commonwealth. This box has a saw-toothed top which makes it impossible for customers to drop their coins on top without having them slide into the coin box beneath.

It seems that carelessness and the rush of newsstand patrons to board a waiting trolley are far more responsible than dishonesty for any loss of coins which generally add up to about four to eight cents on every dollar. The new, grooved-top box has reduced the loss to only two cents on the dollar, which may or may not reflect the meager proportion of dishonesty among patrons.

Desire To Be Honest

"Invariably," declared Mr. Norris, "a coin deficiency one day is made up by a surplus some other day, indicating that we can depend upon the word of our patrons."

Treasury Varieties To Be Weekly Feature

Another step in the promotion of good will among taxpayers has been instituted by Denis W. Delaney, Collector of Internal Revenue, with inauguration of a new musical program, first of its kind in the Treasury Department, to be opened tomorrow, from 4 to 4:30 o'clock over Station WMEX. Collector Delaney will open the series of programs at this time, to be known as "Treasury Varieties."

The Sunday programs are to consist of big-name bands appearing in the Boston area, guest stars from the sports and theatrical world, and from time to time as various taxes become due, a short explanation of such taxes to be given by representatives of the Internal Revenue Department, so the public may be fully apprised of tax matters. Sunday's program will feature Pat Sands and his orchestra, Miss Connie Allaire, song stylist, and Les Parker, a new vocal sensation.

Boston Maps Full Day Of July 4 Fetes

Independence Day will be observed by the City of Boston with particular wartime fervor next Tuesday with a complete, all-day round of events beginning with a flag raising at City Hall in the morning and ending with a community festival of pageantry and singing on the Common during the entire evening.

The city's "161st observance" of the "168th anniversary" of the signing of the Declaration of Independence will be punctuated by a parade starting at 10:10 a. m. from City Hall; a salute to the Declaration at the plaque on the Common; observances at the Granary Burying Ground at 10:30 a. m.; reading of the Declaration from the balcony of the Old State House at 10:45 a. m.; and oration exercises in Faneuil Hall at 11:30 a. m.

How the city comes to commemorate for the 161st time an occasion which happened 168 years ago is as interesting as its stellar program of events for the Fourth. It seems that Boston began 173 years ago to observe the anniversary of the Boston Massacre.

Hence, when the Declaration was signed, the city continued to observe Boston Massacre Day in the same spirit of patriotism that usually characterizes Independence Day. So the city didn't get around to regard Independence Day as a supplementary holiday until 1783, although the Declaration was signed in 1776.

Gradually, Independence Day assumed the caliber of a national day of observance, although the Boston Massacre is still observed in the Hub City with considerable respect.

During the afternoon of the Fourth the city plans a series of neighborhood events, including band concerts, sports for the children, festivities and patriotic ceremonies, climaxed by a Fifth War Loan demonstration at Charles River Embankment.

An athletic meet at Franklin Field will be staged throughout the forenoon. The parade starting from the City Hall at 10:10 a. m. will take the route from School Street to Washington to Avery to Tremont, to Court, across Washington to the Old State House and there forming a hollow square for ceremonies beneath the balcony.

Hingham Ship Workers Get Vacations With Pay

WASHINGTON, July 1 (P)—Approximately 18,000 employees of the Bethlehem-Hingham Ship Yard, Inc., Hingham, Mass., will receive one week's vacation with pay after one year of service and two weeks with pay after five years under the provisions of a National War Labor Board shipbuilding commission directive issued recently.

The rate of vacation pay, the commission directed, is to be the employee's average hourly base rate of pay during the ten pay periods immediately preceding the vacation. The order is effective for all vacations taken in 1944.

Scouts Push War-Loan Drive; Vacations Deferred to Do Job

Youth in khaki—nearly 8,000 Boy and Girl Scouts of Greater Boston—today began their "clean-up drive" to help boost the Fifth War Loan over the top before the books close a week hence, the Massachusetts War Finance Committee reported.

The Scouts will act as ushers, orderlies, and aids to local War Finance Committees in the 22 cities and towns of the Greater Boston area covered by the Scout districts. In some sections Scouts will make house-to-house canvasses to obtain pledges for war-bond purchases.

Although the Scouts cannot receive cash, they may obtain signatures on pledge blanks stipulating the amount, date, and place. If the purchaser should be unable to visit an issuing agency, the committee said that an adult Scout representative will call at the home to complete the bond sale.

The drive is being directed by O. A. Kitterman, Scout Executive of the State's $828,000,000 quota, out that many of the boys have delayed their summer activities to help and some will transfer to summertime farm work immediately after the drive ends.

Fifth War Loan bond sales in Massachusetts up to Friday totaled $631,800,000, or 76.3 per cent of the State's $828,000,000 quota. Sales of E bonds in the State reached $36,500,000, or 32.6 per cent of the $112,000,000 quota. Sales of all types of bonds in Greater Boston were $427,862,000, or 80.9 per cent of the quota.

Saving of Water Wins

An Army Award of $200

CAMP EDWARDS, Mass., July 1 (P)—Floyd A. MacFarland of Framingham has been awarded $200 for saving 200,000 gallons of water daily at this camp.

Mr. MacFarland, chief operating engineer of the sewage disposal plant, made the saving by installation of a small pump which permits re-use of large amounts of water and eliminated possibility of a cross connection with processed water. The award was made under an Army service forces program which reimburses civilian employees for suggesting improvements and economies.

while E bond sales reached $22,212,000, or 33 per cent of the $65,600,000 quota. This latter figure meant the purchase of 11 LSTs (Landing Ship, Tanks) by Greater Boston bond subscriptions.

Despite the holiday on Tuesday, Committee officials said there would be no relaxation of the drive. They pointed out that a let-down now would endanger the eventual success of the campaign in the State.

The Committee reported that the all-service show, "Direct Hit," is playing tonight at Quincy High School, will be seen at Plymouth, on Sunday, Falmouth and Hyannis, on Monday; Nantucket, on Tuesday; Cambridge, on Wednesday; Lawrence, on Thursday; Gloucester, on Friday, and wind up its tour in Newton, on Saturday.

Brookline Play Area Programs Started

Ten weeks of supervised recreation and handicraft began this week on 15 reservations in Brookline, two more than operated last year. The comprehensive program will keep young people occupied throughout the vacation period with all varieties of competitive sports, folk dancing and singing, as well as quiet games and handwork.

The play areas are as follows: Boylston, Brookline Avenue, Brookline Field, Clark, Coolidge, Cypress Street, Dean Road, Devotion, Driscoll, Heath, Lawrence, Lowell, Parsons, Pierce, and Robinson.

Strikes and Job Resumptions Contrasted in Labor Picture

By the Associated Press

The National War Labor Board moved today to bring about settlement of two labor controversies, one which has resulted in the work stoppage of 9,000 employees in a war plant and the other which threatens a walkout of 26,000 Mid-west truck drivers.

The truck drivers strike, scheduled for midnight Friday, was postponed a few hours before the deadline, pending outcome of a WLB hearing in Washington next Thursday.

The second controversy getting NWLB attention involved the work stoppage of 9,000 employees of the Timken Roller Bearing Co. in Canton, Ohio, which, the Board said, is seriously interfering with production of vital war materials. Officials of the United Steel Workers Union affiliate of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, were directed by the NWLB to end the strike, which began June 26, and is over union dissatisfaction with the handling of grievances in one department.

Meanwhile, more than 7,000 other men and women remained idle in 10 other labor disputes, including 6,500 in Pennsylvania where a wave of walkouts affecting war production hit the state yesterday. Operations in a steel mill and seven other industrial plants, including five coal mines, were disrupted. Simultaneously, four other strikes ended, and about 2,550 workers returned to their jobs.

Postponement of the truckers' walkout was announced in a telegram to the NWLB from Thomas

E. Flynn, Executive Assistant to the President of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, the Board yesterday had ordered the Midwest Operators Association, representing 113 trucking companies in 12 Midwest States, to show cause at the July 6 hearing why they had not complied with a NWLB directive granting the drivers a wage increase.

In Lewiston, Idaho, operations at the Lewiston Sawmill Potlatch Forests, Inc., described as the largest white pine sawmill in the world, halted last night as C. I. O. Union members went into what they termed "a continuous meeting." They said they were protesting the alleged failure of Company officials to provide rotation day and night shifts monthly. Company officials did not comment. The number of workers affected was not immediately available.

At Joliet, Ill., 600 workers at the Rubberoid Company, roofing material makers, quit work, protesting proposed use of a new type of machine prior to agreement of a new wage scale.

Longer Vacations

CHICAGO, July 1 (AP)—Members of the 14 non-operating railroad brotherhoods are seeking an extension of their annual one week vacation with pay to 12 to 18 days, Union leaders said yesterday.

Union spokesmen said the 1,000,000 members of the brotherhoods, who won the one-week paid vacation last December, are now asking for the following schedule:

Twelve days for employees who have worked at least 160 days in the preceding calendar year; 15 days after two years in continuous service; 18 days after three years' service.

General chairman of each brotherhood are filing the request with each railroad for conferences on the demand. Should individual negotiations fail, the Union spokesmen said a national committee would be appointed, following the customary procedure, to investigate the request.

Naziland Refugees Aid Britain in War

By Religious News Service

LONDON, July 1 (AP)—Of the 56,000 German and Austrian refugees now in Great Britain, 20 per cent are Christians who have come under the German ban because of Jewish forebears or because they opposed the Nazi regime on political or religious grounds. These facts are disclosed in a five-year survey completed here by the Christian Council for Refugees from Germany and Central Europe.

Ninety-five per cent of the refugees are engaged in work connected with the British war effort, the survey discloses. The Christian Council has provided £161,000 to help refugees during the five years of its existence.

Canada's Population Is Up by 158,000

OTTAWA, July 1 (CP)—The Dominion Bureau of Statistics said recently the population of Canada in June last year, including members of the armed forces, was 11,812,000 compared with 11,654,000 in 1942, an increase of 158,000.

Small decreases between 1942 and 1943 were recorded in the estimated populations of New Brunswick and Saskatchewan. Quebec disclosed an increase of 67,000, Ontario 33,000, and British Columbia 30,000.

Kaiser Yard Completes Liberty Ship Schedule

RICHMOND, Calif., July 1—With today's launching of the Liberty ship Benjamin Warner, the Permanent Metals Corporation's shipyard here, operated by Henry J. Kaiser, completes its production of 519 Liberty ships.

The ship honors the father of the film-producing Warner Brothers—Harry, Jack L. and Albert. Sponsor is Lita B. Warner, daughter of the late Sam Warner. Mrs. Anne Robbins, oldest daughter of Benjamin Warner, was chosen to be matron of honor.

Ceremonies included the unveiling and dedication of a large-scale reproduction of the Statue of Liberty, to stand in the ship yard as a symbol of valiant war work done by the Liberty ships.

Smithsonian Head Shifts Tasks

Dr. Abbot resigns as head of institution but will continue as research associate.

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

WASHINGTON, July 1—A man who for years has been exploring and publicizing the natural wonders of the sun, the earth, and the stars, who has been honored with degrees from universities throughout the world, who has received awards from a host of natural scientific societies, steps down today as secretary of the Smithsonian Institution. For 16 years he has guided that world-famous private foundation whose arcaded portico and flag tower, the entire structure of reddish-brown sandstone, dominates Washington's Mall and is the architectural antithesis of the many modern Federal buildings that adjoin it.

Dr. Charles Greeley Abbot, however, is retiring. Although his assistant, Dr. Alexander Wetmore, in charge of the National Museum, succeeds him as Secretary, Dr. Abbot is to continue with the Smithsonian as a research associate.

World-Wide Interests

Dr. Abbot's interests and accomplishments are world-wide and world-known. He has invented many devices for harnessing the sun's energy and putting it to work for man's benefit. He uses the sun's rays to heat his home and cook his meals. He has used it to power a steam engine. Recently he demonstrated some apparatus that converted more than 15 per cent of solar radiation falling on its mirrors into mechanical power.

The Smithsonian is possibly best known as the repository of Charles A. Lindbergh's plane, the Spirit of St. Louis, which is located in its Arts and Industries Building. But the Smithsonian Secretary's interest in aviation is wider and more extensive than the Lindbergh plane and the Winnie Mae, the plane in which Wiley Post flew around the world in seven days and 19 hours, another Smithsonian exhibit. For Dr. Abbot was for years a defender of S. P. Langley's claim to the title of inventor of the airplane as opposed to the Wright Brothers' claims.

Received Many Honors

Dr. Abbot, who comes from Wilton, N. H., and is a graduate of Massachusetts Institute of Technology, has received degrees from Melbourne University, Case School of Applied Science, George Washington University, and the University of Toronto. He won the Draper Medal of the National Academy of Sciences, the Rumford medal of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. He is a member of natural science academies in this country and in France, Britain, Germany and Mexico. His studies of the sun have led him on several solar eclipse expeditions. Besides his volumes on birds, he has authored "The Sun," "Everyday Mysteries," "The Earth and the Stars," "Fundamentals of Astronomy," "The Sun and the Welfare of Man," and "Great Inventions."

Being Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, which with its associated museums and foundations constitutes the largest and most important collection relating to the natural history, ethnology, geology, and paleontology of the United States as well as numerous collections of natural scientific objects from other countries, is a major accomplishment in itself. For the Secretary of the Smithsonian has not only been entrusted with the United States National Museum but also with supervision of the Bureau of American Ethnology, the Astrophysical Observatory, the International Exchange Service, the National Zoological Park, the National Art Gallery (not to be confused with the new Mellon Art Gallery), and the Freer Gallery of Art.

Variance in Pattern

In New York City, where the situation is unusual because of a labor surplus, Paul V. McNutt, War Manpower Commissioner, explained yesterday the regional director's plan is somewhat different from the national pattern. There the plan will apply only to less essential employers of four or more employees with these employers not permitted to hire male workers between the ages of 18 and 45 except through and with the permission of the USES.

The hope here, as it is for the plan throughout the nation, is to bring about the transfer of work from workers from less essential work to essential activity and from areas where there is a surplus of labor to those where there is a shortage of manpower.

Mr. McNutt in explaining yesterday the need for placing employment ceilings on industries in tight areas disclosed that such areas contained 79 per cent of the munitions industries. He estimated that in the entire country there were some 9,700,000 munitions workers, 2,700,000 of whom were women.

Dewey Plans 'Long Pause,' Then Hard-Hitting Campaign

pause," before he really starts winding up and letting go, is deliberate. He doesn't want to bore the electorate or to weary it. He believes that a considerable period of quiet will be mutually satisfactory to the voters and to himself.

And even after the "long pause," the Governor does not plan to undertake an intensive, national campaign as early as has been customary in the past, by Labor Day or before the opposition presidential candidate has been out on the stump. Not so this year, as Mr. Dewey now sees it. He inclines to the view that a month or five weeks at the most is all that is needed to bring his case before the country, and that no political campaign can be maintained at a high level of effectiveness over a much longer period.

Climax in October

This would mean that Governor Dewey probably will not launch his major travel and speech-making until nearly the first of October. And from then on there would be no letup. One advantage accruing to such a plan is that it would enable him to deal with the issues which events, rather than advance plans, show are going to determine the outcome of the election, rather than to stress other matters much earlier which may well be ruled out in face of world events.

This year's Republican presidential nominee, being a Governor himself, inclines to the full-time possible use of the other Republican governors, individually and collectively, in the campaign.

One plan is that a group of the western G. O. P. governors will campaign in the East almost on a bloc while eastern governors will carry the Republican cause through the West. There is the further possibility that an effort will be made to find a way in which all 26 of these state executives, who constituted a vigorous, independent influence at both the Mackinac Conference and at the Chicago convention, can bring their joint weight to bear on the campaign. They may speak several times in a body.

It can be put down safely that Governor Dewey is not going to conduct a quiet, war-muted, back-porch campaign. When the time comes he will use the radio frequently and effectively—he doesn't have to spot anything on elocution—and there will be speech-making trips completely across the country. There will not be another "Willkie train," leaving Elwood, Ind., the first of September and never bringing the nominee to a stop until election eve. But Mr. Dewey plans to get around the country a good deal and there will be major speeches in the major cities.

Returns to Albany

Following his trip from Chicago last night, where he concluded conferences with the Republican National Committee members, Mr. Dewey returned to Albany today, was given an enthusiastic ovation on the steps of the Executive Mansion and plunged into the midst of business waiting him as Governor of New York.

With the selection in Chicago of Herbert Brownell, Jr., of New York, one of his closest personal and political aids, as Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Dewey yesterday carried through sweeping reorganization of the top command of the Republican Party for the Presidential campaign.

The new structure of the G. O. P. leadership represents an evipoint compromise between the Old Guard and the more liberal wings of the Party and results in the elimination of all the former intimates of Wendell L. Willkie from the Executive Committee.

Clearly, Mr. Dewey is acting to seize the initiative in the campaign and is devoting himself to welding a smoothly functioning political organization of teamwork associates capable of giving the Republican ticket more sustained national support than any Republican nominee has had in the past three—for them—unsuccessful elections.

Spangler Replaced

Mr. Brownell, zealous young Manhattan attorney, former New York Assemblyman and manager of Mr. Dewey's two gubernatorial campaigns, was elected unanimously to replace Harrison E. Spangler, Old Guard from Iowa, who has steered the Committee's affairs for the past 18 months.

The four Vice-Chairmen of the new National Committee setup are Ezra R. Whitla of Idaho, Werner W. Schroeder of Illinois, Mrs. Horace A. Sayre of Oklahoma and Mrs. Katharine Kennedy Brown of Ohio.

Mr. Whitla is the only holdover among the Vice-Chairmen. The election of Mr. Schroeder gives a place of influence to the Illinois National Committeeman who was rejected by the Party as National Chairman last year because of his close association with the extreme isolationist wing of the Party.

The two partisans of Mr. Willkie who were eliminated were Sinclair Weeks of Massachusetts, whose place as National Treasurer was given to J. J. Ross of Kentucky, and Mrs. Grace Reynolds of Indiana.

Mason Retained

Harold W. Mason of Vermont, a member of the more conservative faction of the Party and close associate of the outgoing Chairman of the National Committee, was retained as Secretary.

Mr. Spangler himself was given the post as General Counsel of the National Committee, succeeding Henry P. Fletcher, who retired. National headquarters of the campaign will be located in New York, on the tenth floor of the Hotel Roosevelt, under the immediate and active direction of Mr. Brownell.

Governor Dewey, who addressed an open session of the National Committee in Chicago briefly yesterday morning, announced that all of these decisions had been reached unanimously and had the personal approval of both Gov. John W. Bricker, his running mate, and himself.

Confident of Unity

Mr. Dewey called upon the National Committeemen to make a "gigantic effort to conduct a winning campaign which will have as its purpose the saving of the Republic and the winning of the war."

"In the months to come," he said, "regardless of the divisive efforts of the propaganda agencies of the Administration, I am sure we will remain as united as we are now. They are experts on division. They have been trying to create the impression of a divided America, and you may be sure they will now try to divide our party. They will not succeed."

Indiana Blocs Unites in Drive For Lake Park

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

HAMMOND, Ind.—Defeated in attempts to insure immediate land acquisition for the proposed Wolf Lake State park, Lake County religious, labor, fraternal, civic, and political organizations have united in plans to prevent dissipation of the lands and to insure action at the next session of the State legislature.

Long a dream of the heavily-populated industrial Calumet area of Indiana and Illinois, the park project has met with unexpected opposition during the last few years.

Chief obstacle to action is the Indiana State Department of Conservation policy that State parks will not be developed inside city boundaries and that no tract of less than 1,000 acres will be acquired or developed.

Lake in Two States

Wolf Lake, spring fed and with a constant stage of water, shallow enough to be safe for swimmers, child rowboat and sailing recreation, ice skating and iceboating, lies across the Indiana-Illinois state line. Its Indiana exposure and banklands are entirely inside the City of Hammond. Its Illinois waters and lands lie entirely inside the City of Chicago.

The Chicago parks district Forest Preserves Commission and the State of Illinois own all except 200 acres of the Illinois water and shoreline. Appraisals have been made of these 200 acres with the object of acquiring them under the forest preserves system.

The Indiana side is undeveloped except for a small tract of 20 acres which is owned by the City of Hammond as Forsyth park. Indiana acquisition of approximately 600 acres of lands would be necessary.

$476,000 Fund

The Chicago Regional Planning Commission and Chicago authorities envision a two-state park for Wolf Lake to serve the 300,000 residents of Lake County, Indiana and approximately 1,000,000 in South Chicago areas.

Proponents of the Indiana park project have been stymied by the fact Indiana's Legislature in 1941 abolished the Indiana Board of Public Works. A fund of $476,000 exists in the State Treasury now, and will rise to $550,000 at the end of 1944 for purchase of lands and development of Wolf Lake as a state park. The Legislature voted in 1937 to levy a 2 mills State tax for the purpose but provided in the bill that the purchasing commission should be comprised of three members of the State Board of Public Works, and a member each appointed by the Governor from the State Senate and House.

Abolition of the Board of Public Works in 1941 wiped out the purchasing commission and, since that time, many attempts have been made to divert the ear-marked Wolf Lake park funds to other land purchases or parks in the State.

In the special session of the State Legislature, called April 10 to consider soldier vote legislation, a bill was presented by proponents of the park to set up a new land purchasing body.

Decision of the Republican majority in the Legislature, however, to limit the session to the soldier legislation, prevented the Wolf Lake bill from being reported out of committee.

School Census Needed

Lack of a school census is another reason for the rise in child-labor violations here, Miss Binford says. When a family moves from one section of the city to another, it's an easy matter for children to stay out of school, undetected.

Until 1929, any Illinois child who had finished the sixth grade and passed his 14th year could leave school and work full time in interstate commerce, day or night. Now he must stay in school until 16. But between 14 and 16 he can get a permit for full-time vacation work or part-time work during school months provided his entire work and school day does not exceed

LONDON, July 1 (CBS)—The Commander of the British Second Army, Lieut. Gen. Miles Dempsey, has been knighted in recognition of distinguished services in Normandy.

General Dempsey in a BBC interview said the Second Army includes troops who fought with the Eighth Army in the Libyan Desert, and with the First, Fifth, and Eighth Armies in North Africa, Sicily, and Italy. In addition, he added, there are a number of British and Canadian troops, who, though they have been trained for years in England, have not yet had a taste of actual warfare.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 1 (AP)—A Maryland farmer grew too much wheat three years ago, the United States Government says, and consequently was named defendant June 29 in a federal suit for a judgment for a claim of $82.96 and interest.

Harry Munshower, of Carroll County, was said to have raised and marketed an excess of 128½ bushels of wheat over what he had been allowed in the wheat-marketing program. The bill of complaint stated the suit was brought to enforce marketing penalties of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938.

Illinoisans Ask Governor To Halt Illegal Child Labor

By Grace Miller

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

CHICAGO, July 1—Inadequate law enforcement has given Illinois the highest rate of illegal child labor of any state in the Union at the present time, according to authorities here, and as a last resort "to have something done about it," the Juvenile Protective Association and the Illinois Child Labor Committee have appealed to Gov. Dwight H. Green.

Every other step has been taken, but without success, to get enforcement of the child-labor law, says Walter O. Cromwell, chairman of the law-enforcement committee of the latter organization and staff member of the Juvenile Protective Association.

"For example," he says, "out of many substantiated cases of illegal child employment reported to the Women's and Children's Division of the Illinois Department of Labor, only two cases have been prosecuted in Chicago since January first, and only 10 or 12 downstate. One case now in court here has been continued seven times."

Promises, Not Action

The rule has been, according to Mr. Cromwell, courteous replies in acknowledgment of complaints, promises of prosecution, but no action. The excuse has been: "Not enough inspectors."

The Illinois Federation of Labor, however, is helping to get enforcement, he states. It's one of about 40 organizations—the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Illinois Federation of Women's Clubs, and such—making up the Illinois Child Labor Committee, appealing now with the Juvenile Protective Association to Governor Green.

"Politics" are at the root of the failure to prosecute child-labor violations, it is claimed. When unscrupulous employers—with an eye on each register—hire underage children behind the smoke screen of wartime manpower shortages, and then are caught, they use political power and influence to "fix things up." If cases are "investigated," they peter out short of prosecution.

Started Over Year Ago

The present big increase in child labor hereabouts started over a year ago, Mr. Cromwell says. Numerous complaints came to the Juvenile Protective Association from Parent-Teacher organizations and individual school teachers—complaints that children were working until 12 and 1 o'clock at night, falling in studies, falling asleep in school.

Many of these youngsters were boys who set up pins in bowling alleys—to an accompaniment of gambling and drinking at liquor bars. Some worked late at night in theaters and at soda fountains. Some girls worked in factories—sometimes on dangerous machines contrary to both state and federal law.

It's true enough, says the Juvenile Protective Association, that employers aren't always the ones to blame. Parents often are.

"But you can't blame the parents too much," says Miss Jessie E. Binford, Executive Director of the Association. "With Joe or Mary working, the parents see a chance for once in their lives to do things—to buy furniture, or clothing for the family at the beginning of a season. And they don't count the cost to Joe and Mary—don't see it."

Good Places to Dine

Lack of a school census is another reason for the rise in child-labor violations here, Miss Binford says. When a family moves from one section of the city to another, it's an easy matter for children to stay out of school, undetected.

Until 1929, any Illinois child who had finished the sixth grade and passed his 14th year could leave school and work full time in interstate commerce, day or night. Now he must stay in school until 16. But between 14 and 16 he can get a permit for full-time vacation work or part-time work during school months provided his entire work and school day does not exceed ceed eight hours. Night work is prohibited.

Such vacation-work permits are supposed to be surrendered when school starts in the fall. Many are not, however. Vacation jobs are kept, and many 14- and 15-year-olds never return to school.

Under Illinois law, children 16 years old can do anything in interstate commerce—dangerous or not—at any time of day or night. Federal law, however, permits "general employment" for minors between 16 and 18. Hazardous jobs are prohibited.

Federal Laws Help

Fortunately, says the Juvenile Protective Association, the present Federal law came into being in 1938. Otherwise there'd be many more minors working at hazardous jobs in war industries. The Federal law helps, because any Chicago or Illinois firm doing war work is engaged in interstate commerce.

Many intrastate occupations such as pin setting in bowling alleys are hazardous, however, and have liquor bars, Mr. Cromwell points out. Yet some of these have hired youngsters 10 and 12 years old.

One such place was a hang-out for young toughs, he relates. Neighboring business houses complained about it. Only after long, persistent, and concerted fighting were juvenile protective authorities successful in getting the place closed for a housecleaning. It has reopened now, "under new management." No permit was given for reopening the bar. But under present laxity of law enforcement, says Mr. Cromwell, a vigilant eye needs to be kept on the place or the bar is likely to reappear.

And now, authorities declare, the children applying for work certificates during the present school vacation are much younger than in the past.

Mr. Churchill replied: "We are honored by your congratulations on the liberation of Cherbourg and for your greetings to American and British troops on the occasion of this most important victory."

Civil War, Clouds Lifting In Greece and Yugoslavia

This is the last of a series of articles by Mr. Harrison, written upon his return to the United States, after an extended assignment in the Middle East.

By Joseph G. Harrison
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

Six months ago it was the firm conviction of many Allied officials stationed in the Middle East and assigned to Balkan affairs that Greece and Yugoslavia would be rent by violent civil war once they had been cleared of Germans. It looked at that time as if the racial and political differences within both countries were so strong that a bitter internal struggle for power was inevitable.

Today the situation seems considerably improved. While the danger of civil war cannot be said to have disappeared, it no longer appears unavoidable. And while the liberation of the Balkans from German overlordship may bring to the surface stresses and rivalries which had been overlooked or deemed settled, those same officials who were most pessimistic now admit that eventual Balkan peace may come without an intervening period of bloodshed.

Two developments appear to be responsible for this improvement. They are:

1. The impatience of the Greek and Yugoslav peoples with the bickering of various groups, some of which now recognize that they have lost public favor.

2. Recognition by the exiled Greek and Yugoslav governments and by their Allied advisers, principally British, that the strong left-wing tendencies in these countries can no longer be ignored.

There is ample evidence at hand that the discontent of the average Greek with the squabbling which went on among the 160 known Greek political parties within the country contributed substantially to the recent agreement to set up a wartime government that would be more representative of the country as a whole than the governments which preceded it.

Not so long ago, the Greek Communist Party sent a circular letter to its members frankly admitting that its tactics of non-cooperation with some of the other resistance groups had seriously compromised it in the eyes of the Greek people, had caused a loss in membership and prestige, and that new tactics must be adopted. It was not so long after this that negotiations were opened which resulted in, first, a cessation of hostilities between the two largest Greek guerrilla groups—the ELAS, and the EDES, now called "National Bands" or EAO. Since Communist influence is strong within ELAS, this change of policy is thought to have had much to do with the suspension of guerrilla civil war.

But this leaves unexplained the mutiny in Egypt during April of Greek Army and Navy units whose admitted purpose was to hasten the negotiations between the Greek Government in Exile in Cairo and representatives of the EAM, the civil branch of ELAS. After all, it is asked, why should pro-EAM soldiers and sailors mutiny at the very moment when EAM was drawing closer to the Government?

The explanation in Cairo is that the mutineers were following the EAM-Communist policy of a few months previous and that due to poor communications the Greeks in Egypt hadn't become aware of the changed situation.

A possible explanation of this delay in getting word to the Greeks in Egypt of the changing situation in Greece itself may be traceable to the fact that virtually all communication between Greece and the Allied world outside goes through British channels. Greeks have charged that on some occasions the British delayed the delivery of messages.

One of the most significant facts regarding the new government is the recognition it gives to the power and influence of the Left-Wing movement within Greece. In this it parallels to some extent the growing scope of the Partisan movement of Marshal Josip Broz (Tito) in Yugoslavia.

How much of this growing power of the leftist movements in the Balkans is due to direct or indirect Russian influence and how much is due to the spontaneous action of the people remains to be determined. There can be no doubt that the Russians have lent considerable active aid to the Partisans in Yugoslavia, especially in presenting the Partisan case to the western world. On the other hand, little definite is known regarding the extent of their activities in Greece. Some well-informed observers in the Middle East say Moscow has elected to leave the Greek situation alone.

In the Middle East, as elsewhere, there were official and unofficial observers who dreaded the spread of left-wing tendencies in the Balkans. But it was generally admitted by even the most opposed that the swing to the Left has been steady and strong.

In fact, this swing has been so pronounced in Yugoslavia that some observers believe it may actually contribute to internal peace after that country is freed from the German yoke. If popular support of the Partisans is as widespread as Partisan advocates in the Middle East contend, Yugoslavia may be able to enter this difficult period with a chance to achieve a degree of political stability which wouldn't have been possible if the war had ended a year ago.

Estimates of Partisan strength vary greatly in Cairo and London. While many reliable sources in the Middle East say they represent an overwhelming majority of Yugoslavia's population, equally reliable sources in the British Capital contend their influence is greatly exaggerated.

Whether the Balkan countries make their postwar adjustments peacefully or whether they attempt to settle their difficulties through internal warfare, they are not likely to accept much dictation from the outside, although it must be conceded that the Allies will be in a position to exert some influence at the close of hostilities when the Balkan peoples will be urgently in need of relief and rehabilitation. In any case, if Allied statesmen still entertain the idea that pronouncements issued from State Departments or Foreign Offices or from the easy seats of embassies and legations may be sufficient to determine the type of governments established in these countries after the war, they are due for disillusionment.

Anyone who has seen and talked with the men who have emerged from these countries, having put in three or more years fighting the Germans, knows that they are determined to decide their own destinies. The men and women of Greece and Yugoslavia have seen everything they possessed taken from them. All they have left is what they themselves can make of their own lives and their country. And nothing in the world can prevent them from making every effort to do this in the way that seems best to them.

So far it has been impossible to monarchists are in the majority. The opponents of King George II say they have the backing of most of the population within Greece, but some neutral observers who are in close touch with developments inside Greece claim that it is impossible for anyone to know this at the present time and that only a postwar election can determine Greek sympathies.

If a majority of Greeks share this animus against their King, his chances of returning to his throne will be extremely remote. The Greeks are intensely grateful to the British—not even the recent British suppression of the Greek Army and Navy mutinies has altered that fact. But few Greeks would dream of permitting this gratitude to influence their feelings if the British should elect to force them to accept George II against their will.

Fortunately the Allies are coming to realize this. British support of the move to broaden the base of the present Greek Government in exile, which coincided with British pressure on the Yugoslav Government in exile in favor of the Partisan movement, shows that London is increasingly aware of popular pressures in the Balkans.

Allied Nations Film War Story For Occupied-Area Showing

By Harold Hobson
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, July 1—Films are being made here and others are being made in which each of the Allied Nations tells the story of the war as it has affected itself. These films are to be shown to the peoples of the occupied countries as soon as the attack on Europe's public utility services and halls available. They are being financed by the Allied Governments in London, it is learned here.

British Minister of Information Brendan Bracken told the House of Commons this week that French-language films already were being sent to France. Similar films in 16 other languages also have been completed, Mr. Bracken said.

Paris will see pictures of the men of the maquis, who resisted the Germans even when they had nothing better than broken boots and wooden sticks. Oslo audiences will see the contribution made to the United Nations' cause by their tankers; adventures of MPs and stories of commando training will flash across the screens of the Hague and Amsterdam; and the industry with B-29's. He told them their work would "greatly shorten the war."

"I know you want to go home," the Vice-President said. "We want you to come home. That's why your work here is so important. Some Americans have said that the Americans are fighting for the right to throw pop bottles at the umpire in Brooklyn. That's one way of looking at it. We're fighting for our way of life."

"That doesn't mean we are trying to make the rest of the world like America—plumbing isn't everything. But we can hope that the rest of the world will come to like many of our ways and adopt them."

Mr. Wallace was the guest here of Col. C. E. Duncan, the Vice-President made himself immediately at home yesterday by stripping to shorts and tennis shoes and playing three fast games of volleyball before eating with the soldiers.

It is, however, in some quarters felt to be regrettable that the films made by the various Governments are designed for their own nationalities only. The people of Prague, for example, will see what the Czechs have done, but they will see and hear nothing of the achievements of the Poles, the Norwegians, the Belgians, and the French. The Inter-Allied Information Office is endeavoring to offset this defect by making arrangements for the mutual interchange of films between the different Continental nations after the war.

Gestapo's Hand Suspected In Fate of German Generals

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A special order of the day signed by Adolf Hitler, disclosing the name of another fallen German general, raises to eight the total of top Nazi commanders killed or captured on the Western Front since D-Day.

The announcement, broadcast by the German Radio, told of the "sudden removal from the ranks of his gallantly fighting army" of Col. Gen. Friedrich Dollmann. The first to fall in action was Gen. Erich Marx, commander of the 84th Army Corps on the Cherbourg Peninsula. Other generals killed in action on the invasion front were: Lieut.-Gen. Richter, commander of the 716 infantry division; Maj.-Gen. Wilhelm Fallay, commander of the 91st Infantry Division; SS Brigadeführer and General in the Waffen SS Fritz Witt, commander of the "Hitler Youth" Armored Division, and Lieut.-Gen. von Hellmich, commander of the 213th Infantry Division.

Two generals, Maj.-Gen. Carl von Schlieben and Maj.-Gen. Sattler, surrendered at Cherbourg to American troops.

The question is not whether the Germans can afford to lose so many generals, as they certainly can, but whether all the fatalities really occurred in action.

The Nazi record in this respect is none too good. Too much evidence has been accumulated which shows that Hitler has no use for generals of independent thought.

In two instances, regarding German Army leaders in Normandy, there is good reason to doubt the official communiques. Colonel-General Dollmann, according to Hitler's announcement, was killed on June 27. Yet the announcement did not come until June 30 and no hint was given as to the cause. It is impossible to assume that it took three days to inform the Supreme Command. It is equally impossible to believe that Hitler would have been slow to stress General Dollmann's "heroic end" if heroism had played a part in it.

Clandestine Reports

Clandestine reports from Germany disclosed that General Dollmann recently voiced grave apprehension about the heavy sacrifices demanded from his troops—sacrifices which he did not consider commensurate to the possible strategic gains.

It also was disclosed that he had run afoul of the generals of the Nazi party formations in the Army—the Waffen SS. They were said to have criticized General Dollmann's campaign plan and to have demanded that an SS general should be appointed commander of the 7th Army, since of the seven tank divisions which formed its bulk four were SS divisions.

It remains to be seen if an SS general will be named to succeed General Dollmann. If so, the suspicion would be strengthened greatly that it was Heinrich Himmler, Gestapo chief, who "removed" him from "his gallantly fighting Army."

The second case is that of Gen-

Toronto Sees Military Exhibit

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

TORONTO—The new life jacket only recently in use by the Royal Canadian Navy was one of the highlights of a recent display here of equipment of the Navy, Army, and Air Force.

This jacket, warm, waterproof, buoyant, does not get sodden, and can support three men. It is made of laminated, mildew-proofed sheeting with a layer of plastic. It has an orange knitted skull cap, with a winking attached, operated by means of a battery in the pocket, and can wink continuously for 36 hours.

The Air Force featured a new type of optical camera which flashes a light equivalent to 2,000,000 watts.

There was also an electrically heated food box which now enables air crew members on coastal command to have hot meals for 12 to 18 hours, even if the temperatures hover around zero. One or

British Ask War Limit On Information Ministry

By J. Emlin Williams
Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, June 30—The House of Commons debate this week on the British Ministry of Information served to justify its existence as a wartime organization, but simultaneously to indicate a strong desire in Parliament that Government control of public liberty of expression should not exist a moment longer than the exigencies of war demanded.

Mr. Brendan Bracken was speaking not only for his Ministry of Information, but also for the BBC and secret activities like the Political Warfare Executive, for which he is mainly responsible. His account of his stewardship was well received by the House, particularly because he had something inspiring to say and said it inspiringly.

It is now nearly three years since Mr. Bracken took over the job in which his predecessors, either because of lack of personal qualifications or Britain's position in the war, had failed rather miserably. Parliament therefore is all the more inclined to be favorable to a Minister who could report progress since his last statement two years ago.

Dealing with the home sphere Mr. Bracken showed how in both publications and films, the Ministry had succeeded in keeping the public fully informed regarding developments as well as doing educational work. He also stressed the fact that both in publishing and film-making, the Ministry's achievements hadn't been in competition with private enterprise, but rather through closest cooperation.

Foreign activities of the ministry, Mr. Bracken pointed out, were aimed not at distributing "red-hot" news of the war, but at giving the British background.

Dealing specifically with the United States, Mr. Bracken accepted the position that the American radio, press, and public were allergic to crude foreign propaganda and he therefore rejected many propagandist suggestions for high press-salesmanship.

The British Information Service in the United States was in his opinion rightly more of a reference office than a propaganda machine and was doing most useful work. He maintained that "American journalists in London were able to present a picture of British life and conditions more effectively than British propagandists in America." And Mr. Bracken was content to leave it at that.

Good Start at Moscow

Conditions for the Ministry's work in the Soviet Union were quite different from those in the United States, he said, and he felt that the Ministry staff in Moscow had made a good beginning toward removing prejudices generations old. Mr. Bracken also paid tribute to the BBC, whose news service is "regarded as the most reliable in the world."

The European service of the BBC transmitted 179 programs in 24 languages every 24 hours, and supplied "underground" movements with information.

Another activity increasing in importance was that of production of leaflets which are dropped over enemy territory by Allied air forces. These are now dropped at the rate of 73,500,000 leaflets monthly.

Mr. Bracken also mentioned an activity which even many politicians might have forgotten, namely, organization of hospitality [through great voluntary societies throughout the country] for the first arrivals of American troops in this country.

Panorama of British

He concluded: "Those who had honestly devoted their energies and talents to the task of illuminating by all modern devices of publicity, the majestic panorama of British at war, British at home, and British overseas had no reason to be anything but proud of their own work and service."

This seemed also the opinion of speakers in the debate that followed. They were all much more concerned about the future of Government propaganda organizations after the war.

Most of the speakers assumed that since the Ministry of Information was synonymous with propaganda, and therefore with censorship, the Ministry should disappear as quickly as possible after the war's end. Otherwise liberty of expression for which generations of Britishers had fought would be lost.

The Minister appears to be

Only 30,000 New Autos Left for Civilian Needs

WASHINGTON, July 1 (P)—The chances of getting a new car took a decided drop today with disclosure by the Office of Price Administration that only 30,000 remain to meet all requirements until automobile production can be resumed. In normal times, the 30,000 cars would take care of three days' buyer demand.

The agency also has removed inner tubes from the rationing list and directed a slight increase in the number of new tires for July and August.

British Growl at Official Veil On Damage by 'Buzzbombs'

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

SUPREME HEADQUARTERS, ALLIED EXPEDITIONARY FORCE, July 1—The imperturbable people of southern England are taking the German flying bombs calmly, but are beginning to grumble against their own Government's policy of withholding information.

The attitude taken is that the Government is being more susceptible to the morale factor involved in the robot assault than the public itself. It is agreed on all sides that where the bombs hit cannot be published. It also is agreed unanimously that German claims for the new terror weapon are preposterous and fantastic. But now a strong public demand is finding expression in the House of Commons and the newspapers that more information be told. There is a disposition to criticize the Government for going too far in secrecy and a rather scornful wonder why the simple truth and the falsity of the German claims are not allowed to speak for themselves rather than the airy attitude of unconcern adopted by the censorship officials.

Casualty Figures Sought
Questioners this week pressed the issue whether weekly figures of casualties in southern England should be published and the Government said it still was considering the matter. The Government said it was not prepared to relax censorship of the localities where the most bombs are falling. The questioners argued that morale is lowered more by lack of information than by bombs. Government spokesmen made the inconclusive reply that the matter still is being considered.

Three popular dailies all criticized the Government yesterday. The Daily Mail called it a "wrong decision," and called for "the truth, the whole truth."

Lack of Facts Decried
The Daily Express pointed out that the common man is going about his everyday business as usual and mostly grumbles "concerning the lack of facts. This value phrase, southern England, must soon have served its turn," the paper said. "Much of southern England has never heard or seen a flying bomb and the Germans know it."

The News Chronicle took the same line, pointing to the courageous calmness of the man in the street and adding, "Rumor is not a good morale raiser, and for the past fortnight rumor has been almost our only guide."

It is observed that the Germans apparently are sending most of the bombs over during three intervals—in the morning hours when persons go to work, around the lunch hour and late at night. Obviously, this is an attempt to produce absenteeism and to keep persons awake late.

Hope that the "buzzbomb" would be a decisive weapon seems already to have been abandoned in favor of nuisance tactics, although the robot's propaganda value among the German masses remains.

Fall of Minsk Impends as German Lines Crumble

from the northwest, and that the roar of battle is echoing through the city's outskirts.

Storm troops and the Gestapo were reported trying to bring some kind of order out of the battered Nazi legions defending the capital of White Russia, now Hitler's most important bastion on his eastern front.

Three Soviet armies converged rapidly upon Minsk from the northeast, east, and southeast. Gen. Ivan Cherniakhovsky's Third Army streamed through the thick forests northeast of the city over numerous bridges now stretched across the Berezina River.

The Army paper Red Star disclosed that the main crossing was made over a bridge which guerrillas held in a pitched battle until Red Army troops arrived.

The Red Star dispatch said Soviet cavalry moved through the forests north of Minsk and outflanked the city from the northwest.

Correspondents reported hundreds of demoralized Germans surrendering before they reached the city.

The Red Army was represented as having some difficulty in moving up for a direct blow upon Minsk because of the large number of captives crowding the roads.

Borisov Falling
Street by Street

Of fighting in the city of Borisov, main railway center northeast of Minsk and the Nazis' biggest defense point before the city, Red Star Correspondent Yakov Miletsky said "one street after another is being captured."

Minsk looked hopeless, and to its distant north on the Dvina, Gen. Ivan Bagramian began his drive for the Baltic republics, reaching positions at Dvina only 26 miles from Latvia and 54 miles from Lithuania.

Polotsk appeared hopelessly outflanked.

To the south of Minsk, Marshal K. K. Rokossovsky, in addition to pushing up the Bobruisk-Minsk railway and highway, continued to punch directly westward toward Baranovice, capturing an area about 60 miles away just north of the Pripiet Marshes.

The capture of Slutsk just north of the marshes on the broad highway between the Soviet Union and Warsaw gave the Russians an excellent base for a three-phased operation. They can keep straight ahead westward for Baranovice, turn north and cut the Minsk-Warsaw railway, or go southwestward upon Pinsk.

With a skyful of Stormoviks (dive bombers) battering the German tanks, and fighters—many of them American planes—strafing the Nazis as well as bombing communications lines, Marshal Rokossovsky has a green light ahead and is taking full advantage of his opportunity.

Moscow announced on June 30 the killing of 80,000 Germans on two White Russian fronts, bringing to 132,000 the number announced since June 23.

Thirty more German tanks were reduced to shattered hulks of steel, bringing the total destroyed by the British alone since D-Day to 142 and the total destroyed or disabled to 322.

If the German armored units which Gen. Field Marshal Erwin Rommel has thrown into the fight were up to strength, they would represent about 2,000 tanks and self-propelled guns. Some of the units have been brought from Russia.

Florence Declared Open City by Hitler

By Reuter

London, July 1
Hitler has declared Florence an open city so that "irreplaceable treasures" may be preserved, the German Radio said today.

The brief announcement said: "The Führer has declared Florence an open city so that the irreplaceable treasures of the city may be preserved."

In the central sector of the beach-head, drove to within 2½ miles of St. Lo, reaching the villages of La Forge, on the main highway to Isigny and Le Carillon, due north of the city.

Indications were seen that Marshal Rommel himself had taken personal command of the beach-head front, particularly after the passing of Col. Gen. Friedrich Dollmann, Commander of the German Seventh Army, which Berlin announced June 30.

Thus far British pressure in the Odon River salient was so great that Marshal Rommel had been unable to mount one large-scale counterattack, but had been committing his divisions in local attacks quickly as they reach the scene of action.

Marshal Rommel still had a sizable reserve of tanks which he has not used in the battle—but which he could use any moment.

"Allied troops are strengthening their positions on both banks of the Odon River," said Allied Communiqué No. 51. "All enemy attempts to break through were frustrated in the Caen-Evrecy sector. There is nothing to report on the rest of the front."

A check of the battlefield disclosed that the Germans suffered heavy casualties in their violent counterattack to the River Odon recently. This attack was repelled in four hours of bitter fighting by a British division which never had been in action before.

Marshal Rommel attacked "viciously" three times at the salient across the Odon on June 30, Supreme Allied Headquarters said, but was unable to disrupt reorganization of his striking forces by Lieut. Gen. Miles Christopher Dempsey, Commander of the British Second Army.

The grim determination of the German High Command to block the Allied advances was seen in the fact that despite their serious defeats on the Russian Front, they have been withdrawing divisions from the eastern front and sending them to France.

General Dempsey announced at the front that his men had captured German prisoners who only recently had arrived from the fighting in Russia.

Air Over Europe:
Allied Planes Back
Attack in France

RAF heavy bombers, maintaining a steady campaign aimed at strangling the Nazis' channels of reinforcement for the Normandy front, bombed rail centers at Vierzon, 48 miles south of Orleans, on the night of June 30-July 1 in the Allies' fifth heavy bomber operation in 24 hours.

At the same time, British Mosquitoes kept up the Allied air pressure on Germany itself by attacking a synthetic-oil plant near Homburg on the Rhine. One Mosquito failed to return. The five heavy-bomber operations cost 16 planes.

RAF heavy bombers struck twice at the Germans' flying-bomb-launching ramps in northern France on June 30 and American Flying Fortresses and Liberators smashed at five enemy airfields in France and Belgium before a force of more than 250 big British Lancasters and Halifaxes turned from strategic to tactical work shortly after supper time June 30.

In that unusual operation, the RAF heavy bombers, escorted by Spitfires, dumped over 1,100 tons of explosives on German armor and troop concentrations near Villers Bocage. The big planes descended below 4,000 feet to deliver that blow in support of the Allied ground troops in Normandy.

Robot Bombs:
Southern England
Hit Intermittently

German flying bombs crashed intermittently into southern England on July 1 and it was believed likely that Prime Minister Winston Churchill might make a brief statement to the House of Commons soon on this new form of German attack.

It was felt, however, that Mr. Churchill would not give very full details on the districts where the missiles have been hitting, the extent of damage they are doing, or the methods used to combat them.

On June 30, the Prime Minister toured anti-aircraft sites watching the battle against the winged bombs.

The number of robot planes coming over increased after dawn and the Air Ministry announced additional casualties and damage.

Denmark:
Fighting Reported
In Capital's Streets

The Free Danish Press service reported in a Stockholm dispatch that German troops took possession of the Copenhagen Town Hall, National Bank, Central Station and other official buildings as a general strike continued.

Travelers arriving in Sweden June 30 declared Danes and Germans were fighting in the streets of Copenhagen with rifles and machine guns. They said thousands of Danes were leaving the city.

The Danish Radio left the air at 8:40 p. m. June 30.

Far East:

Chinese Still Hold Encircled Hengyang

The vital rail junction of Hengyang is encircled by three Japanese divisions but still is in Chinese hands, a Chinese Army spokesman said in a press conference in Chungking, and he reiterated charges that the enemy was using poison gas against the defenders of the city, loss of which would remove the last major Chinese position along the entire length of the Canton-Hankow railway.

The Tokyo Radio broadcast a dispatch of Dornier, Japanese agency, dated June 29 "in the suburbs of Hengyang," telling of the fall of the American air base in the area on June 24. This was admitted in a communiqué of Lieut. Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell's Headquarters.

Another Tokyo radiocast said the City of Hengyang was in flames since June 26, and that reduction of the junction had reached a climax with fighting in the streets.

Maj. Gen. C. C. Tseng said that captured field orders showed that a Japanese column which tried to by-pass Hengyang on the east had as its objective the railway town of Liyang, about 35 miles south-southeast of Hengyang. He said this column was halted north of Anjen, 35 miles east-southeast of Hengyang.

A Reuter dispatch from Chungking said direct rail communication between India and China is expected to be reopened shortly.

Chinese forces on the Myitkya front in north Burma and the Salween front just over the China border are now only 64 miles apart with the capture of Mien-ching in the southern sector of the Myitkya front.

General Stilwell's headquarters announced that American Liberators on a sea sweep the nights of June 29-30 bombed the docks and harbor of Takao, important Japanese shipping center on the southwestern point of Formosa.

Saipan Islands:
U. S. Casualties High
In Fierce Struggle

Japan's intention to abandon its tactics of withdrawing from island bases with only minor resistance is demonstrated in the disclosure by Admiral Chester W. Nimitz, Pacific Fleet Commander in Chief, that 9,752 American troops have become casualties of war as a result of the enemy stand on Saipan.

And less than half of that 72-square-mile island in the western Pacific Marianas group is in American hands. Fighting—hard fighting—continues through the sugar-cane fields and along the rolling hills of Saipan. Roughly the American front line now divides the island in half at the route of supply shortened the sooner can the Superfortresses be used with maximum effect against Japan.

Officers here from top ranks on down express full confidence in the ability of Allied forces to keep going regardless of European events.

It would, of course, make a great deal of difference if all power now concentrated against the Germans was added to the already crushing weight of United States forces in the Pacific, but all Allied naval leaders need is a reasonable share of ships, men, and equipment to keep the Central Pacific offensive rolling on to

Sinkings:
Freighter Torpedoed
In Caribbean Water

Survivors reached San Juan, Puerto Rico, recently from what was believed to be the first ship torpedoed in the Caribbean in 14 months. Two men are known to have been killed and 23 are missing of the 47 aboard the small Panamanian freighter. The survivors arrived in port as Allied troops were in the first stages of the Normandy invasion.

Navy officers refused to state positively that the sinking was caused by an enemy submarine, but the survivors were convinced that a U-boat was responsible, although none of them claimed to have seen it.

Meanwhile, the former Grace liner Santa Elena was lost in an attack by Nazi torpedo planes while it carried troops in the Mediterranean, the War Shipping Administration disclosed.

Reich Training Age Lowered; Youthful Prisoners Captured

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, July 1—The capture of many youthful German prisoners in Normandy, Italy, and on the Russian front increases interest in reports from Germany that German boys are being early prepared for the front.

Thus according to a statement by the Reich youth leader, Arthur Axmann, Hitler Youth boys must now "voluntarily" join preliminary training camps.

This is not a new measure, but a considerable intensification in the fifth year of war of the method of getting soldiers at an early age which has been continuing for the past two years.

The courses cover a period of three weeks and are devoted to military drill, physical exercise, and shooting practice.

At the end of the course successful trainees are awarded special war-training certificates ensuring speedy promotion when they later join the armed forces.

Special preliminary training camps for recruits for the Luftwaffe, Navy, and Waffen SS (Black shirt guards within the Army) as well as special camps for motorized and signal troops have been established. The number of these camps has been greatly increased.

When the campaign began in 1942 there were 130 camps; there are nearly 300 today. By the end of 1943 more than 500,000 boys had passed through them.

Russian Prisoners
LONDON, July 1 (ONA)—Soviet Government representatives in England are taking a great interest in the Russians who were captured in Normandy as German soldiers and brought over to Britain.

The number of these captured Russians in German uniforms is not large, but it is believed it will grow as the Allied armies advance inside the Continent.

There are believed to be three categories of Russians among the prisoners. First are those who belonged to the Red Army and were taken prisoner by the Germans, joining the Wehrmacht in the hope of being able to surrender to the Allies at the first opportunity.

Most of these may be repatriated at an early date and are eagerly awaiting a chance to resume the fight against the invaders of their country.

In the second group are those Russians who had lived abroad since the revolution and were conscripted into the German Army. Genuine patriots, many surrendered to the Allies at the first opportunity and are described as eager to join the Red Army. The anti-Nazi activities of many of the Russians in this category were recently praised by French "resistance" leaders.

Many will be welcomed back to Russia, it is believed.

The third category consists of men who "burned their bridges behind them." They are either counterrevolutionaries who co-operated with the Nazis against Russia or former Red Army men who elected to join the Quisling army organized by Gen. Andrei A. Vlassoff or other anti-Soviet organizations. They generally fought stubbornly against the Allies because, as one writer put it, the "battlefield had become their only home." These men will likely be treated as prisoners of war until hostilities end, when their fate will undoubtedly present a complicated problem.

'Secret Treaty' Ruse
LONDON, July 1 (ONA)—German Army officers in France are trying to stimulate their Russian prisoners of war to fight the Allied invasion by telling them that a secret treaty of collaboration and friendship has been signed between Russia and Germany, it has been learned from a French source.

Some of the captive Russians, persuaded by threats or otherwise to wear the Nazi uniform, are paid the extraordinary salary of 100 francs a day plus food, the French source said. In spite of these measures, however, the problem of keeping Russian prisoners in line and working for the Wehrmacht is becoming increasingly difficult for the Nazi officers as the Russian Army moves westward.

Emphasizing the German manpower shortage, a great increase in foreign elements among the German garrisons in France has been noticed since the invasion. In one town eight nationalities were counted, including a group of 18 Chinese. The majority, however, are Poles, Russians, and Croats, whose exact jobs—whether at the front line or maintaining order behind the lines—are yet unknown.

Nationality Data
London, July 1 (CBS)—A decree recently published in the official paper of the German Army orders "Russians, Czechs, Poles, Croats, and other foreigners forced to serve in the German Army, to hand back to the authorities all documents proving their nationality," the British Radio reported, quoting the Polish Telegraph Agency.

"These are new methods to prevent the foreigners from deserting and passing over to the Allies, by making it impossible for them to prove their nationality," the broadcast said.

Nazis Risk Disaster in East
To Stem Anglo-U. S. Tide

would become available to back up the invasion front.

It became almost axiomatic that the Germans would abandon not only Italy, but perhaps Southern France in their efforts to keep pace with the Anglo-American build up in Normandy.

Yet the salient fact remained. Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower had put forces ashore in Normandy without benefit of a port so much faster than the Germans could have anticipated that up through the end of this week they were still strained to the utmost just to keep pace. There was no indication that they were building up any force behind the front big enough to mount a real counter-attack. What should have been held back for such an attack was being required in the line as fast as it came into the battle area.

And this was accomplished in spite of very bad weather in the English Channel which for five days brought beachhead reinforcing of the Allied front almost to a standstill.

In spite of this and other obstacles, Gen. Sir Bernard L. Montgomery opened the battle on his left flank even before Cherbourg had fallen, much less been reopened as a port. What had been the covering force for the attack on Cherbourg became the spearhead of the new drive to break out of the Normandy Peninsula and push into France proper.

The effort precipitated probably the greatest tank battle of the war. Five German panzer divisions were committed, which meant a thousand tanks on the German side. Undoubtedly even more British tanks engaged them in a battle already five days old, the end of which is not even in sight. The invasion was doing what it was intended to do. It was sucking the cream of the German Army into this mounting battle of the West, draining it on every other front, including the Russian.

Opportunity for Soviet
This was the opportunity which had been devised for the Russians. Some skeptics had doubted that the Russians would take advantage of it. It is highly plausible that the Germans believed themselves with the same belief—the belief that the Russians would make a token effort in the East, but never would throw their whole weight into a serious effort to end the war this summer in a complete, crushing defeat of Germany.

It is difficult to explain the weakness of the German front from the Pripiet Marshes to Nevel without some such psychological factor in the scales. There are strong military reasons. The Russian winter offensive exposed both the Romanian and the Galician oil fields to attack. The Germans had to allocate their forces to avert these threats. Political considerations obviously still hang heavily around the neck of the German General Staff. This was proven by

OPA Halts Rationing Of Tire Inner Tubes

WASHINGTON, July 1 (AP)—The Office of Price Administration has ordered the removal from rationing of all tire inner tubes, effective July 1.

It also announced that a total of 3,900,000 new passenger-car tires have been allocated for rationing in July and August, an increase of 500,000 tires in both months over the June quota.

Glorifying God

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

A HOMESPUN adage runs, "When we think about people, trouble grows; when we think about God, trouble goes."

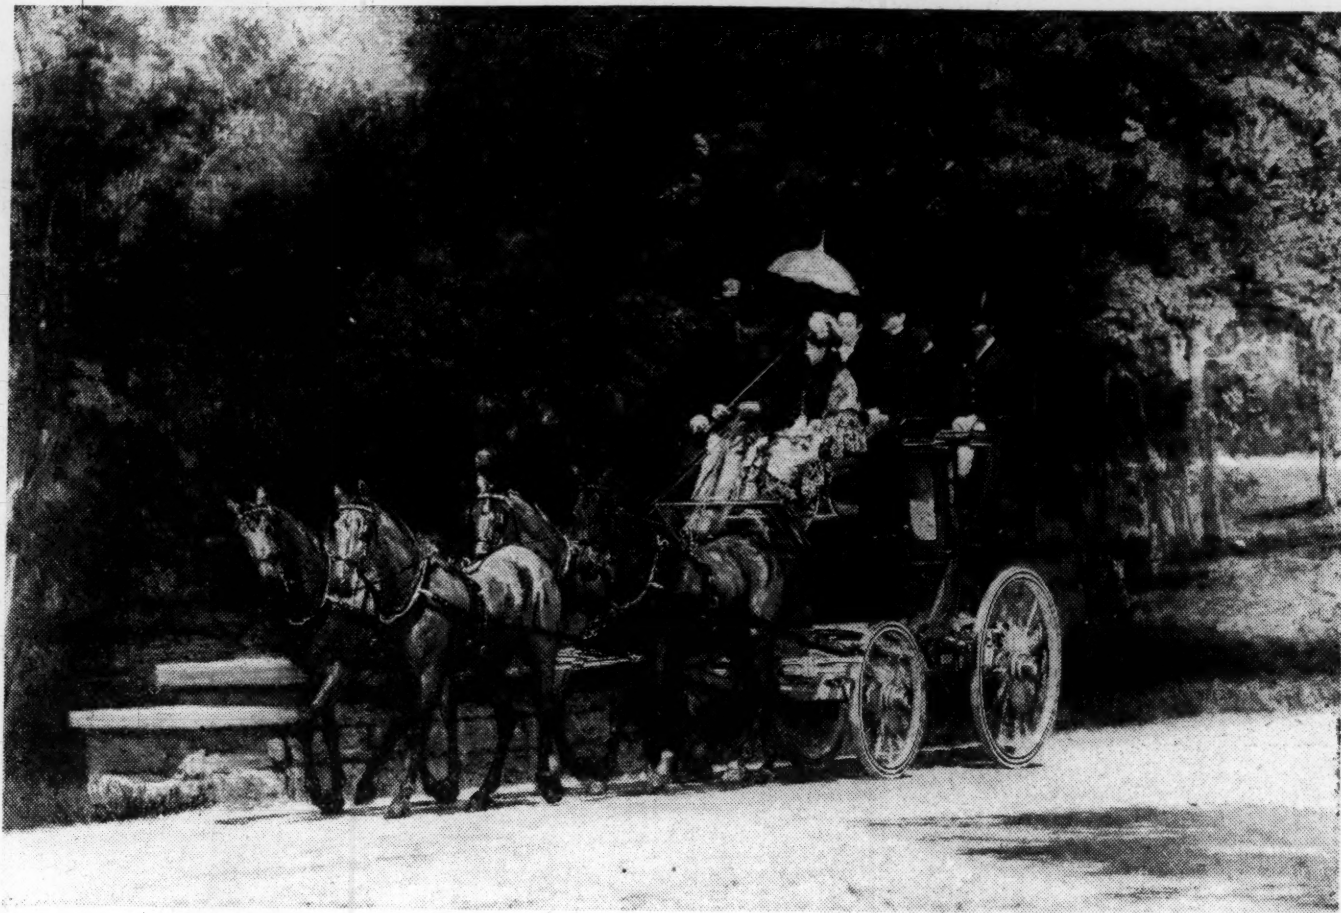

Dwelling in thought on the personal sense of anyone, either as good or bad, is not helpful, as was proved by a young man who had just accepted his first position in the business world. He had spent a short time in the home office in preparation for his work on the road, and on his first trip out the manager of the department went with him to "break him in," as he expressed it.

The young man greatly admired his business associate. He recognized his ability and watched carefully his tactics in approaching the different clients to be interviewed. The manager was a man of high standards, good habits, and a pleasing manner, and was well qualified to represent his company. In other words, he seemed "tops" to the new salesman, who began to pattern himself on him during the several days that they traveled together. All had gone well, and the young salesman approached his first day alone with confidence. Had he not observed every move his manager had made and carefully taken in every word he had spoken? Nevertheless in making his calls he found it difficult to be like his manager—to speak his words and act his part—and at the end of the day he was weary and confused.

He was a student of Christian Science, and in his home and at the Sunday School he had been taught to work out all his problems by turning to God for guidance. He considered the day's work and prayerfully asked God for help in the words of the psalmist (Psalms 139:23, 24): "Search me, O God, and know my heart: try me, and know my thoughts; and see if there be any wicked way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." He wanted to succeed, not so much for personal glory as to glorify God in his daily work and to prove worthy of the confidence that had been placed in him.

As he sought the answer to his problem, he picked up his volume of "Miscellaneous Writings" by Mary Baker Eddy. Opening it, his eyes fell upon these words on page 147: "The upright man is guided by a fixed Principle, which destines him to do nothing but what is honorable, and to abhor whatever is base or unworthy." He continued to read: "He assumes no borrowed appearance. He seeks no mask to cover him, for he acts no studied part; but he is indeed what he appears to be, full of truth, candor, and humanity."

Here was his answer. He had been acting a studied part—studying and trying to be and act like another, instead of expressing his own individuality. He had taken on a borrowed appearance, for he had purposely acquired little mannerisms of his manager. He had sought a mask to cover his own individuality and hoped the mask was enough like another to make him as acceptable as his employer. He was not being guided by a fixed Principle, but by a person. No wonder he was confused.

He had known better, but personal sense, coming in the guise of good, had tricked him. He knew that no one else could do his thinking for him and that anything that presumed to absorb his own or another's individuality was not of God. He recalled the Bible passage where Paul spoke to Timothy, saying, "Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth" (II Timothy 2:15).

He could see that to study to be "approved unto God" was learning to know God and striving to express such faculties as perception and reason, and such qualities as accuracy, thoroughness, gentleness, and amiability. He realized that the experiences his manager had shared with him were valuable and his advice helpful, and that he would profit by his association with him; but he saw that in order to succeed he must rely wholly on God to direct him. Doing so, he knew that he could not fail.

It was a moment of vision for him, and now the true pattern was there for him to follow. Self-consciousness vanished before the desire to follow this higher spiritual pattern, and from that day forward his work met with marked success.

Do we wish to make the world a better, safer, and saner place in which to live? Then let each do his part and be the man of integrity—the upright man—"guided by a fixed Principle." Our efforts will count, for work well done and courageously done benefits the whole world.

Let Every Land Have Joy of Its Poets

TODAY I HAVE READ The Tempest. It is perhaps the play that I love best, and, because I seem to myself to know it so well, I commonly pass it over in opening the book. Yet, as always in regard to Shakespeare, having read it once more, I find that my knowledge was less complete than I supposed. So it would be, live as long as one might.

I like to believe that this was the poet's last work, that he wrote it in his home at Stratford, walking day by day in the fields which had taught his boyhood to love rural England. It is ripe fruit of the supreme imagination, perfect craft of the master hand. For a man whose life's business it has been to study the English tongue, what joy can equal that of marking the happy ease wherewith Shakespeare surpasses, in mere command of words, every achievement of those even who, apart from him, are great? I could fancy that, in The Tempest, he wrought with a peculiar consciousness of his power, smiling as the word of inimitable felicity, the phrase of incomparable cadence, was whispered to him by the Ariel that was his genius. He seems to sport with language, to amuse himself with new discovery of its resources. From king to beggar, men of every rank and every order of mind have spoken with his lips; . . . The Tempest contains the noblest meditative passage in all the plays; that which embodies Shakespeare's final view of life, and is the inevitable quotation of all who would sum the teachings of philosophy. It contains his most exquisite lyrics, his tenderest love passages, and one glimpse of fairyland which I cannot but think—outshines the utmost beauty of A Midsummer Night's Dream: Prospero's farewell to the "elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves." Again a miracle; these are things which cannot be staled by repetition. . . .

Among the many reasons which make me glad to have been born in England, one of the first is that I read Shakespeare in my mother tongue. If I try to imagine myself as one who cannot know him face to face, who hears him only speaking from afar, and that in accents which only through the labouring intelligence can touch the living soul, there comes upon me a sense of chill discouragement, of dreary deprivation. I am wont to think that I can read Homer, and, assuredly, if any man enjoys him, it is I; but can I for a moment dream that Homer yields me all his music, that his word is to me as to him who walked by the Hellenic shore when Hellas lived? I know that there reaches me across the vast of time no more than a faint and broken echo; I know that it would be fainter still, but for its blending with those memories of youth which are as a glimmer of the world's primeval glory. Let every land have joy of its poets; for the poet is the land itself, all its greatness and its sweetness, all that incommunicable heritage for which men live and die. As I close the book, love and reverence possess me. Whether does my full heart turn to the great Enchanter, or to the Island upon which he has laid his spell? I know not. I cannot think of them apart. In the love and reverence awakened by that voice of voices, Shakespeare and England are but one.—From "The Private Papers of Henry Ryecroft," by GEORGE GISSING.

My Old Bicycle at Home Again

OWING to petrol rationing in recent years, it has been possible to see in London both well-to-do businessmen and high-ranking military officers pedaling to their places of work. This is as it should be; for the pedal-cycle has many virtues, and not least of them in my experience is that of fidelity.

I was still in short trousers when my father sent me, under the charge of an elder brother, to buy my first and only bicycle. I told the shopman the kind I wanted and my brother added his single specification, a really strong frame. I did not understand the point of this at the time; but, when we got home, it looked differently.

My brother had decided to teach me to ride on a long straight path with a dense yew-hedge on one side and a three-foot drop into a meadow on the other. He chose this path because of a sharp slope at one end, which he said would give me a good start; this was true, but, as the impetus gained frequently carried me over the drop, I learned almost as much about diving as about cycling. However, owing to my brother's foresight, the only damage was a deep dent across the front mud-guard of my cycle.

During the next few years, we lived on the Sussex coast, and the cycle worked hard carrying me westward across high chalk downs to Beachy Head and Birling Gap; or eastward, through the marshes to Pevensey with its ancient castle and the Martello towers along the sand, both standing guard against Napoleon as though someone had forgotten to tell them the news of Waterloo. Once it even accompanied me across the Channel, to see the ramparts of St. Malo and the great tide racing in from the horizon at Mont-St.-Michel.

After many raisings of the saddle and handle-bars, it at last reached its full height; and, expecting to grow out of it shortly, I passed it on to my younger brother. But, a year or so later, when my seniority allowed me to take a bicycle to school, it had become apparent that my old cycle and I had reached our full stature at the same time, while my younger brother was rapidly outgrowing us both. So, with his consent, it returned to me and I took it to school.

Although boys at that school lived soft enough, bicycles lived hard. Not only did they have to negotiate the roughest paths by day, but their night-quarters were a debatable land between them and the school Clerk of Works. When the latter managed to occupy their shed with his building materials, they had to sleep in the open. Eventually, the matter was settled by a boundary commission, which divided the shed between the rival claimants; but the limited space now left resulted in considerable loss of paint every time a cycle was extracted or inserted. However, my bicycle made no protest, except that it now emitted a shrill F-sharp every time I braked.

When I went on from school to the university, I left the bicycle with a friend on what I expected to be a permanent loan. But, at the university, I soon discovered that desirable lectures had a habit of being delivered in immediately succeeding periods at opposite ends of the town, and that practically the only way of getting from one to another in time was by cycle. So, the next time I visited my old school, I called in the loan and once again my faithful companion came back to me.

Toward the end of my last undergraduate year, I put up a notice on the college notice-board as follows: "For Sale. Bicycle with strong, reliable frame. No bell, lamp, pump, or other accessories. Front brake not working, slow puncture in back tyre. First offer over £1 accepted." The next day I sold it to a huge Scotsman for a guinea; he was really much too big for it, but was no doubt attracted by the strong frame, for bicycles of lesser breed might have refused so stalwart a rider.

Years passed. I was working in London and had little contact with bicycles, except when I occasionally put up for the night at a Cyclists' Rest in the course of a walking-tour. Then recently my wife's nephew wrote to ask if he could stay a week with us and whether we would hire him a bicycle for the period of his stay. I was a little doubtful about the latter request, for bicycles had become almost as hard to get as petrol; and, from the veteran machines now appearing on the road, it was clear that many of them had been rescued at the last moment from the scrap-heap.

However, I rang up the cycle-shop and was relieved to hear the man there say that he had just got a cycle he could let me have. He began describing it. Suddenly I stopped him.

"Has it a large dent in the front mud-guard?" I asked.

"Why, yes, it has," he answered a little surprised.

The next day my old bicycle was at home again. I was glad to see that it had been repainted and thoroughly refurbished and refurnished; in fact, apart from the dent, by which it had been recognized, and its slightly old-fashioned lines, it looked almost like new.

I was sorry when, at the end of the week, I had to let it go again. But I now feel sure that, whenever or wherever I need a bicycle, I shall only have to whistle and my true-hearted friend will find some way of rejoining me. In the meantime, I like to think it may be carrying some financier to the City or some brigadier to Whitehall.

New Page

Before the aureate dawn, a pure white page Covered wide windows, like a page erased By the starred fingers of departing night. Here was a pristine manuscript untraced By any markings. What would be the sign Morning would leave there? What clear word presage The sunrise, fashioned line by lambent line? Immaculate that still unlettered page.

Then in the East a hand began to write; Rubrics that flamed, a golden glyph that rayed Outward in candent characters of light— Another promise radiantly made. Immortal splendor for a moment burned Before day entered, and the leaf was turned.

Rocamadour: the Tower-Crowned

THE FIRST SIGHT of Rocamadour is one of the great moments of travel in France. And if it is not quite one of the supreme first moments—like the first sight of the spires of Chartres, or the ramparts of Carcassonne, or the shadowy magic purple of the Mount of St. Michael in Peril of the Sea—if it is not so great as any of these, it shares much of the dramatic quality of their beauty; and, more than any of them, it presents itself clear and complete. You are quite close to Rocamadour before you see it at all; it appears as a finished whole, distinct, and yet, clinging to its towering precipice above the unwelcoming valley, somehow unbelievable.

This is no dream city in a haze; it is a sight altogether definite; and it is magnificently spectacular. Out of a bare and rocky upland that seemed far from anywhere, around a sharp curve where the road is cut through the rock itself, you swing suddenly, unexpected—and behold, cliff-hung, tower-crowned, Rocamadour! It is less than a mile away, and you are looking straight at it.

For a moment it is both stupendous and beautiful; and then your road descends quickly into the valley; you are entering the village; for a little while all the beauty is lost. . . . And you must go warily, I think, in your mental processes, if you are to recapture it; there are some travellers who never find it again. . . .

But, on the day when I saw Rocamadour first, it lay blazing under a pitiless July sun, brilliant, hot; hot rocks above a hot valley; I toiled wearily up the hot stairway to the hot place in front of the church; it was almost as hot going up the winding path on the hillside; and there were tourists everywhere. Not until evening, when the goats came through the ancient gateways and stopped to be milked at the cottage doors, and the shadows dropped from the grey cliffs into the narrow valley, did peace and beauty come back, with the twilight, to Rocamadour. And not until then did I feel any effortless understanding of the legend of this place.—From "The Other Chateau Country; the Feudal Land of the Dordogne," by KATHERINE WOODS, (Boston: Houghton Mifflin.)

Rubber: Human Side of Danger and Hardship in South American Battle

Infested Jungle Territory Vies With Savage Tribes

Communications gaps shown in no-plane no-reply to request for flying boat—Lack of foresight by United States before Pearl Harbor causes big task in securing vital war material.

Waiting in the jungle for a plane that had been ordered by radio but never came, The Christian Science Monitor's correspondent had direct evidence of how tenuous are communications on which the Rubber Development Corporation depends in South America. The following article carries forward a revealing account of human values behind the controversial war rubber program.

Uncensored South America

Twentieth Article in a Series

By Roland Hall Sharp

Staff Correspondent on Latin-American Affairs for The Christian Science Monitor
WRITTEN AS FROM GUAYARAMERIN, Bolivia—With sudden dramatic impact the story of what it means to get out wild rubber came into focus for me one morning at this Mamoré River port.

We were in the shadow of hills only 18 miles away where savage Indian tribes of the Brazilian Matto Grosso lately had killed rubber tappers who ventured into their domain.

H. H. Munro, Manager of the Rubber Development Corporation (R. D. C.) in Bolivia, had flown down from Cochabamba to arrange for a trip up the Guaporé River along the western border of Matto Grosso.

Before leaving Cochabamba, Mr. Munro sent a radiogram to Manáos on the Amazon River, requesting that a Catalina flying boat be sent to Guayaramerin.

Reporters On Trip

A few days before the left his office, "Pancho" Ramsey, Chief Pilot of the R. D. C. aviation system, came through Cochabamba. Pancho, a one-time American cowboy and barnstormer, had flown our party of 13 North American reporters through the rubber country six months earlier, aided by Captain Frank L. Sage and other pilots.

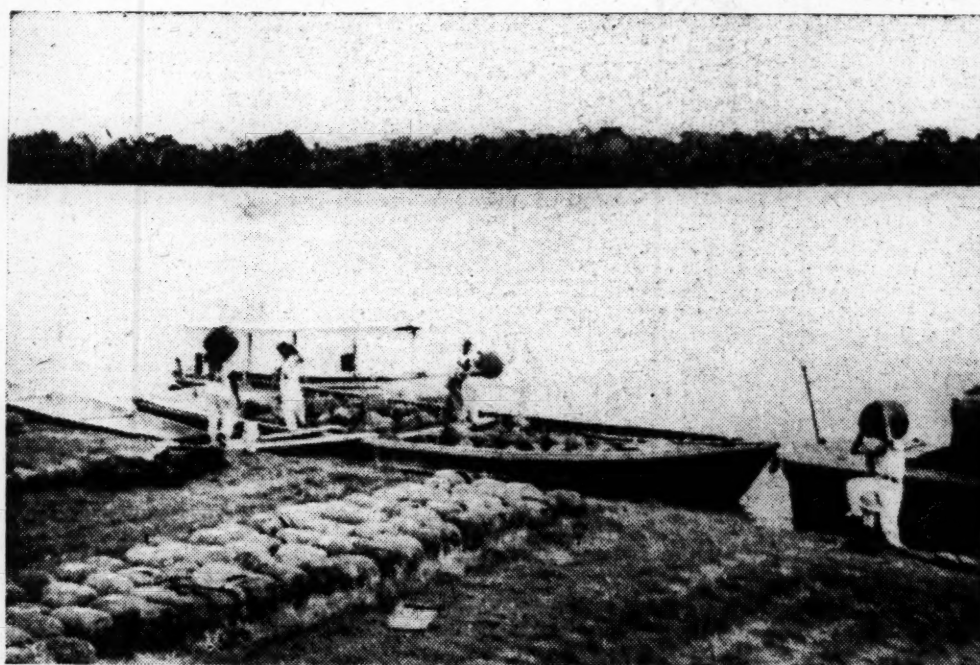

Chief Pilot Ramsey assured Mr. Munro that he would follow through and see that a Catalina arrived on time. Then he took off in a fast sleek Lockheed for Panáos in his inspection flight that was to return to Manáos eventually by way of Colombia.

I had flown a day earlier from Cochabamba to Riberalta on the Beni River. From Riberalta the overnight river launch brought me to Cachueta Esperanza. Then a truck of the House of Suarez pounded a dozen of us across the muddy road to Guayaramerin. It is a region known for its massive water snakes—the sucuri, for unusually large jacaré—a South American type of crocodile, and for weird insects.

Could "Locomotor" We were bouncing around on our gear in the open bed of the truck when it hopped a branch about six inches long. The branch was gray, dry, broken off at one end, and at first glance had no visible means of locomotion.

But it could "locomote," and did, to the discomfiture of Bolivian passengers who wanted to have nothing to do with it. They called it "mata-caballo," or "horse-killer." The horses were said to get in trouble by eating the things. Some people in the truck did not take this belief seriously. Others did.

The insect—for it was no branch—had two thin legs on either side.

out of Riberalta had rushed his companion back from the upper reaches of the river a few days before. If the full story of these rubber technicians is ever told, it will be an epic of American war sacrifice.

Soldiers at the front operate in the mass. These soldiers go out alone against the jungle. Sometimes for weeks or months they are out of touch with their bases. Then they emerge to tell of friendly Indians put to work gathering rubber, or to report promising new areas.

Once in a while the tappers encounter hostile Indians and do not come back.

Criticism Rightly Placed

Armchair criticism of such men does not go—out here in the field.

Rather, the brunt of valid criticism runs back home to a nation that allowed itself to be caught without an adequately protected supply of indispensable natural rubber. Because foresight was not exercised in Washington before Pearl Harbor, this whole jerry-built and mistake-laden war rubber program became inescapable.

Such thoughts had been building up before that morning when six months of observation and thinking suddenly came into clear focus.

Loaded With Rubber

The moment of focusing turned out to be arrival of the R. D. C. I, a steam launch—35 horsepower! I was on the second floor, typing, when excitement began to surge up from the river bank.

There, upstream, came a symbol of the whole rubber program. Two trailing "snakes" of rubber balls threaded on steel cables more than 100 feet long were being swung downstream by the current past the launch to which they were attached.

A round raft made of rubber balls floated alongside. Lashed to the tug-like launch on either gunwale were barges loaded to the rails with rubber.

It was an occasion that stirred the community even more than the landing, earlier that morning, of a white fish seven feet long by a small boy.

With holiday air, the arriving men and some of their accompanying families swung ashore.

Those men and women had been traveling for days from their advanced area of operations on the Guaporé River. Some of their colleagues not long before had been caught by hostile Indians. They are modern pioneers. In the

Bringing In the Wild Rubber From Deepest Amazonia

Upper left: Balls of rubber being loaded from the river bank at Guayaramerin, Bolivia, for transfer by small boat to the end of the Madeira-Mamoré Railway in Brazil on the other side. Some of this rubber was held up by transport bottlenecks until grass grew up through the rows, as shown by this picture. Upper right: The R. D. C.-I, a steam launch of the Rubber Development Corporation, soon after arrival from the Guaporé River with a load of rubber. Lower: A raft of rubber and two long "snakes" threaded on steel cables through the holes made when the rubber is being smoked. White latex is poured on a rotating pole and gradually built up, layer by layer, over a chimney that concentrates the smoke into a small jet.

pioneer tradition they are fearless, and even gay at times.

Such a time was this. But they also told of losing a raft of 23 rubber balls, and then they became serious. That raft represented months of hard work.

They suspected it had been stolen to be smuggled eventually across the border into Argentina. The hard-pressed Argentines are offering almost any price to get rubber away from the United States over most of Bolivia's wartime production.

Wait for Plane Meanwhile Mr. Munro and I were waiting for the Catalina that was to take us up the Guaporé. Since his original radiogram from Cochabamba to Manáos, more than a week had passed. No ship, and what was more, no reply of any kind came in response to numerous additional radiograms.

That gives some notion of communications difficulties. Where the blame lies would take more than a Congressional investigation to uncover. It is standard practice in much of the South American interior for telegrams to take weeks before arrival—when they do.

Mr. Munro had urgent business back in Cochabamba. A large pile of supplies for advanced posts had been readied under canvas on the river bank for loading into the plane.

We waited. In the interval I had ample opportunities to see R. D. C. "with its hair down," in the words of Mr. Munro. A Yankee far from his present Boston home, he is as frank and as New England as baked beans.

One evening he invited the Colonel in command of the local garrison, and the town's few leading citizens, to a modest party. In the afternoon we went together across the river to Guajará-Mirim in Brazil to buy sandwich spreads or other delicacies.

The crossing was made in the largest dugout canoe I have ever seen, driven by a temperamental outboard motor that had a way of stopping. We were above the rapids.

Gauged from a single log, the canoe at its widest mid-section would almost have accommodated a jeep.

As we stepped on Brazilian soil, Mr. Munro began to ask questions about three piles of rubber balls that were spread on the bank and at points toward the railway station. This is the upstream end of the Madeira-Mamoré Railway that runs for some 200 miles around a series of cataracts.

Sent To Police

The chief of Bolivian R. D. C. operations wanted to know in his quick, emphatic way, whether this valuable rubber was being guarded. No one was in sight to watch it.

From the near-by customs shack we were sent to the police. It developed that the Bolivian agent who was being paid to take care of the rubber wasn't doing the job. Having just had 23 balls disappear during the voyage of the R. D. C. I, Mr. Munro was not impressed by assurances that no one would touch the rubber. He took immediate steps.

There is no great point in piling up more examples of inefficiency. They thrust themselves before any observer. More pertinent is the question: Are critics ready and willing to come down into these backward, infested areas and do a better job? The line forms on the right.

Oh, yes, that plane never did come for us. Mr. Munro decided to give it up. He helped me catch a Panair do Brasil flying boat that landed unexpectedly early one morning on an R. D. C. charter flight to the Brazilian side.

So I reached Manáos again in the center of the Amazon Basin.

Protestants Censure Sending of Belgians To Labor in Reich

By Religious News Service

LONDON, July 1.—The Belgian Protestant Federation has protested against conscription of Belgians for compulsory labor in Germany.

A large number of young men from Protestant communities have been deported to Germany, the communication said.

So far, no acknowledgement has been received from Gen. Alexander von Falkenhausen, Military Governor of Belgium, to whom the protests were made.

When Allies Come

LONDON, July 1 (ONA).—The Belgian exile government, it has been learned, has offered to share the expense of building installations needed for Allied armies when they are fighting on Belgian soil against the common foe.

Among other questions to be discussed in Washington, it was understood, is the problem of the money to be spent by American troops in Belgium. While the matter has been settled in principle, in accordance with the recent agreement signed by the Belgian Government and Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, Belgian circles believe that a number of practical problems still remain to be settled.

Co-operatives Mark Century Within Britain

Movement that grew out of penury of weavers now owns shares in business in 40 lands.

By Nora E. Taylor

Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor
LONDON, July 1.—Britain's co-operative movement today is observing the centenary of its foundation.

Co-operative Societies throughout the country have arranged local celebrations.

The centenary is being observed today, July 1, to combine it with "International Co-operators Day," held annually on the first Saturday in July. The hundredth anniversary of the founding of the movement does not occur until Dec. 21, when the first "co-op" store was opened at Toad Lane, Rochdale, Lancashire, in 1844.

The British co-operative movement grew out of the penury of weavers in Lancashire in the last century. After their employers had refused increases in pay, some of these weavers set about finding other ways of improving their conditions.

They decided to establish a store of their own to increase the buying power of their meager wages by dispensing with paying profit to other retailers, and returning all surplus profits to their own members on a patronage basis. To open a shop required capital, and although a few among their number had a little spare money, most of them earned too little to put down any substantial sums.

First Shop Opened

Saving for their goal was the only solution, and after about a year's effort, they were able to produce £28 and open the Toad Lane shop. With the advent of this store, the Co-operative movement adhered to a system of trading which has remained the foundation of its business. The points listed were:

1. Shareholding membership open on equal terms to all.
2. One member, one vote, irrespective of capital held.
3. Low fixed interest on capital.

4. Sales at current—prices with return of the net surplus as dividend on purchases.

5. Provision for individual investment of dividends and savings.

6. Provision for withdrawal of shares at par, above a minimum made transferable.

Growth to 40 Lands The Toad Lane store was opened on a Saturday evening in December, 1844, and a half pound of sugar was sold. One year later, the weekly sales had reached £30; the society had 74 members, and on a turnover of £710 showed a surplus of £22, nearly equivalent to the original capital outlay. This was the precursor of a movement which now counts some 70,000,000 owners of shares in co-operative businesses in 40 lands.

From retail to wholesale trading was a natural step, and the Co-operative Wholesale Society came into being some 20 years later, with its attendant factories, works, mines, and agricultural enterprises.

Touring Taffles Welcomed Home TAFFLETOWN, U. S. A.—Wildly enthusiastic citizens greeted Henry Q. Taffle and his family with congratulations for putting Taffletown (pop. 15,000) on the map via a new feature of The Christian Science Monitor. They were whisked to their home, accompanied by the Mayor and a group of leading citizens. In the sanctity of their home and in answer to final promptings as to his decision on the presidential question, Henry Q. Taffle promised to make a direct statement at the Gladhanders' luncheon tomorrow. Will Taffletown see its favorite son in the White House? A whole town waits the morrow with bated breath.

Red Cross on the Job in Cherbourg

By a Staff Correspondent of The Christian Science Monitor

LONDON, July 1.—Following immediately in the wake of the liberating armies, the American Red Cross already is operating on the Cherbourg peninsula.

Field directors were the first to those assigned to hospital ships plying between Southern England and the Continent.

Mr. Gibson said these women were known in America as "Gray Ladies"—from the color of their uniforms. They weren't allowed to land, but distributed candies and comforts to men on board and generally helped to keep morale high.

Field directors handle all personal problems of the troops, distribute comforts and take care of the general welfare of the soldiers in the field.

If a soldier seems worried about folks back home, the field director sends a cable to the Red Cross chapter in a man's home town whose members contacts the family, investigate the problem and cable back the required information.

Ready for Any Call There are nearly 7,000 American Red Cross chapters in the United States, Mr. Gibson said, ready and willing at all times to deal with these problems as they arise.

As soon as the next wave of Red Cross workers can get over, Clubmobile girls will be included. Four girls are attached to each truck, which they learn to drive and service themselves. The truck contains a doughnut machine, candies, stationery, books, and a gramophone with a good selection of records. The object is to assist all outlying units.

Hollywood's Child-Actors Go to School on the Movie Lots

By Tamara Andreeva

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Hollywood, Calif.
Tossing spit-balls, throwing paper darts, or dipping blonde curls in ink is definitely passé among children-actors who study in cheerful little playhouses on the movie lots of Hollywood.

"Perhaps," says Mary E. MacDonald, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's Resident Teacher, "it's because we give our children a chance to expend their extra-energies in other ways."

Besides being given a chance to emote before the klieg lights, the children are kept out of mischief by being permitted to be themselves at all times. Miss MacDonald is a great believer in making a child-actor feel free and at home.

Lois Horn, Resident Teacher at Warner Bros., says that children who play temperamental brats on the screen, usually make the best and most docile pupils, though at times, they are a bit unpredictable. Dickie Moore (now in the Army) showed up for school one day with a big green snake coiled around his arm. It became Miss Horn's immediate job to break down his violent interest in nature.

Miss MacDonald's charges are the same way: they show independence and quickness of thought rarely found among non-professional children of their age. Being constantly among the adults, they think and act like adults, though few of them are older than sixteen.

Assorted Ages
As to ages, schools on movie lots boast pupils of assorted ages and sizes. In Miss MacDonald's schoolhouse at MGM, bright with pictures, plants and fluorescent lighting, the youngest, "Butch" Jenkins (of the "Human Comedy" fame) is four-and-a-half; the oldest, Vicky Lane, 17. Butch declared he wanted to go to school to learn how to give autographs. Which is as good a reason as any as far as Miss MacDonald is concerned.

Contrary to the usual procedure of segregating school children by age groups, Resident Teachers on motion picture studio lots believe in instructing all their charges together. True, each youngster has to follow a study program specially prepared for his age (which makes more work for the teacher), but the entire class benefits from the removal of the age barrier. The benefit is most noticeable during study period when older children help the younger ones with their problems, and it is perfectly obvious during the play hour which is ever so much more hilarious.

ous because of the younger children being present.

Though its contingent changes frequently, the size of a studio school class is seldom large. However, a few years ago, Miss Horn's class at Warner Bros. reached a record figure of 130—and all boys, members of the "Wild Boys of the Open Road" cast. Twenty to 25 students is usually a maximum, and by Board of Education Rules, one teacher is provided for every 10 students—for 10 of these extra bright, inquisitive and fidgety youngsters is quite a handful.

Individual Instruction

The class's compactness is again a boon to the student who gets the benefit of individual instruction and coaching which would not have been possible had the class been large. But even with a small class, the Resident Teacher is very busy—especially during the grueling period when the picture is being shot. At that time some of the children working on the picture must be on the sound stage practically the whole day long, while others are able to get their regular instruction at the schoolhouse. Unable to instruct in both places at once, the Resident Teacher calls on the Board of Education whence special teachers (in possession of a general elementary certificate, experience with primary grades, and knowledge of at least three languages) are dispatched to help out. "To squeeze in the required three hours of daily study in their already crowded curriculum takes quite some maneuvering," Miss MacDonald explains. But to give instruction to busy child-actors while they are working on a set can be accomplished only by letting the mountain come to Mahomet.

The mountain-idea is meant literally: instead of having the child waste time in transit between stage and schoolhouse at a distant end of the lot, a miniature schoolhouse is wheeled right onto the sound stage. In it the children take refuge from the klieg lights every free minute they have, to get in the prescribed "three hours of daily study before 4 p. m."

The children's ability to shed the routine of a few minutes ago and concentrate on their work would put grown-ups to shame, Miss Horn says. Both in Miss MacDonald's and in Miss MacDonald's school, the children are eager students. They want to study because both teachers believe in making study a fascinating period.

In the Arts

Besides working before the cameras and cramming three hours of required instruction into their day, the young ones of the movies manage to get at least half an hour of instruction in some branch of the arts in which they show special promise. To take care of such specialized instruction each studio maintains on its teaching staff coaches in voice culture, music, tap, ballet and ballroom dancing. Of course such a heavy curriculum demands a safety valve, and MGM's Resident Teacher offers it to her students in many different ways. To mention but a few, right in the classroom is a ping-pong table. Whenever attention lags, or the little ones look pinched and tired, Miss MacDonald claps her hands, and the recess is on. Grabbing the ping-pong paddles which they keep handy right in their desks, the big and little ones take turns at hitting the celluloid ball. To see a six-year-old lick an eighteen-year-old is not unusual.

More serious-minded ones grab a book from a special shelf reserved for recess reading. Among the favorites given top billing by the bright kids are adventure stories, sea stories, the world's great short stories, anything by Kipling, and one-act plays.

A Speech Day—every Wednesday—is another form of relaxation, combined with instruction. Miss MacDonald insists on it. All seasoned little actors, the children nevertheless acquire additional self-reliance in delivering a speech before the class which is free to criticize them. Eager to please, they outdo themselves in presenting new subjects. A nine-year-old girl amazed the class the other day by giving a competent craft. An eight-year-old boy held his audience spellbound by a simple little tale about a dragonfly (which he made extemporé, after Miss MacDonald put a damper on his speech about the common flea).

15-minute lecture on fighting air-

On the whole, every Resident Teacher says, in spite of their very busy day and irregular hours, the movies' children are denied nothing that their non-professional brothers and sisters get in a public school. In fact, they will tell you with pride, their students always pass their year-end Board of Education exams with flying colors.

In the schools on the movie lots child actors of all ages are in class together, each following through an instruction program of his own. School "keeps" at various times, also, for each child works out his required "three hours of daily study before 4 p. m." as he can between the times when he must be acting before the klieg lights. Sometimes the school goes to the child, in the form of a small portable schoolroom wheeled on to the sound stage. Tripping up the steps to class, some of their "costumes" still on, are (from the left) Joan Leslie, Joyce Reynolds, Dolores Moran, and Diana Hale, all featured players of Warner Bros.

Jackie (Butch) Jenkins, here watching Margaret O'Brien (both of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer) write a V-Mail letter, probably to a fan, once said he wanted to go to school to learn to write autographs. Something new in vocational education! At any rate, much of the schooling the child movie actors get is probably put to such immediate and unusual uses. Margaret and Butch go to school "in between" as do all busy Hollywood child actors.

Friends Across Boundaries

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

Deming, New Mexico

A school children's crusade for a more realistic Pan-American understanding is being conducted in Deming, New Mexico, a little town near the Mexican border where good neighborliness is a daily essential.

A teacher of Spanish, Miss Nell Irvin, is the inspiration for the children's enthusiasm in this Pan-Americanism class. With skillful direction she has led the youngsters along the line of their own particular interests. She encourages one child to make a study of the architecture of the countries south of the Rio Grande and prepare a sketch book of typical examples. One little girl has carved, painted and dressed dolls in the costumes of South America. Another has modeled from flour and salt, and tinted with oils the birds of the pampas and the jungle.

Beehive of Industry

A visit to the "Pan-Am" class as the children affectionately call it, is a visit to a beehive of industry, each child working on his individual project. This busy bee is filling a scrapbook with biographical sketches of Mexican heroes, this girl is illustrating with thumbnail drawings the story of Brazil's many products; but whatever the project the child is doing individual research and happy with the sense of creative effort.

The walls of the classroom are decorated with pottery, weaving, a corner cupboard is crammed with souvenirs sent the children by friends they have made through correspondence with officials of various South American countries. One gift rather overawed the children and has had to spill over from the classroom to the hall. An enterprising youngster wrote the President of Venezuela for a flag, expecting the usual small flag of Johnny, the Venezuelan saint.

The Deming youngsters have their own personal flag, some 15 feet long, bearing the presidential seal in one corner.

Greeted the Mexicans

Recently the children entertained a group of Mexican school teachers on an educational tour of the southwest. Smiles lighted dark Mexican eyes when the children greeted the visitors with folk songs of the land across the border. The Spanish pronunciation of Johnny, low-headed youngster from a bean farm in the valley, or of Sally whose father, a six-foot Texan, runs a cow ranch in the hills, may not have been perfect, but the children joined in lustily with Juan and Maria whose parents recently came across the border to Deming to work in the cotton fields.

"This familiarity with the culture and customs of our neighbors breeds appreciation," says Cloyd Miller, principal of the school, "not only of the people of other lands, but of the Spanish-speaking children who are a part of our school population. No longer do Johnny and his tow-headed friends gang up for rock fights with Juan and the other 'muchachos.' And when Sally's mother meets Maria's madre at one of our school programs where both girls are dancing the Mexican 'jota,' these women find that they too have something in common. Miss Irvin's class is not only one in Pan-Americanism, but in pan-humanism also."

They Eagerly Study America Now

Special to The Christian Science Monitor

London

In the years following the outbreak of the war, English schools, of various types, have paid increasing attention to the study of foreign countries and peoples. The entrance into the war of one European nation after another, the appearance of great numbers of nationals of the United Nations, and British Commonwealth, the members of the United States in uniform on British soil, the presence of thousands of refugees from Allied and Axis countries, doubtless roused a desire to learn more about the human and economic backgrounds of all these people, than the history and geography curriculum had provided.

The initiative for this type of special study came very largely from the teachers themselves. Headmasters and headmistresses became individually conscious of the fact that as the world became smaller every day, contacts with the world beyond the British Isles must be created for the youth who were growing up. The Board of Education, by way of support, has for the last two years arranged in different centers of the United Kingdom, special courses for teachers on the British Commonwealth, the United States, and the U. S. S. R., which have been attended by thousands of teachers and school leaders. Memoranda and bibliographies on the subject have been issued in large numbers to both elementary and secondary schools, and the Board's inspectorate are ready to advise the schools on methods and schemes for developing this work.

World Citizenship

A remarkable experiment on the subject of "Citizens of the World" was carried out by the Wiltshire Education Committee in a summer residential course for teachers. In the words of the assistant education officer, "this course was conceived in terms of the teacher's own education and culture. It was not in any sense pedagogic, but was an attempt to give teachers a wider view of the world as it is seen by citizens and as educationists a wider view of world citizenship."

Representatives of America, Russia, Norway, Czechoslovakia, China and the British Commonwealth spent a week with the English teachers. The program included performances of plays typical of these countries. Parts of "Green Pastures," "The Cherry Orchard," "Pierrot Lunaire," "The Insect Play," "Lady Precious Stream," and "The Corn Is Green," were played.

The provisional Allied Governments, now resident in Great Britain, also do all they can to satisfy the desire of British educa-tionists for more and up-to-date information about their countries. For instance, a series of conferences on Poland for school teachers is being held in different centers of England and Scotland. Those which have already taken place were attended by hundreds of schoolmasters. Polish and English scholars have also lectured on Polish culture, literature, economy, agriculture and history.

Under Gilbert Murray

It would not be possible to report on what is being done in England for the guidance of teachers regarding "International Relations Studies" at English schools, without referring to the work of the Council for Education in World Citizenship (formerly the Education Committee of the League of Nations Union), the chairman of which is Prof. Gilbert Murray. By supplying a platform for the actual collaboration of educationists from many countries the Council gives English teachers an opportunity of obtaining firsthand information on the life and culture of foreign lands, and of exchanging ideas and views with men and women from abroad. The "World Citizenship Summer School" of Pencoed, South Wales, held in the summer of 1943, was attended by 300 English educationists, largely secondary school teachers, as were three previous summer schools and conferences also to enrich educationists in their knowledge of international affairs and "to confer on methods of education for world citizenship."

What Books for Myself or My Child?

Written for The Christian Science Monitor

Book lists always seem to attract people. Perhaps, like us, you never come upon one without going through it. Everybody ought to have a supply—especially for choosing books for the children in the family. Making a list for oneself, from browsing in public libraries and book shops, from book-talk with one's friends, and from reading current book reviews, is twice good; it provides an individualized list and it enriches one's background. Knowing where to get lists for different ages and on different subject-fields is valuable, too.

We get so many requests for book lists that it might be said here that as a newspaper we do not give out lists. In the course of a few months, however, we answer a great many requests by giving out sources for such lists.

One of the best of these sources is the American Library Association, 520 North Michigan Ave., Chicago 11. For grown-ups it prints 25-cent pamphlets put out as issues of "The Booklist," on various subjects—Civil Liberties and Democracy, the American Spirit in Fiction, Latin America, Canada, China, and others. Most of these we have reviewed as they came out. For children and young people also it gets out issues of "The Booklist" on Latin America, Canada, and other subjects. The ALA School and Library Division will send on request a useful mimeographed bibliography of book lists particularly helpful in collecting lists of books for children.

While the mimeographed folder just mentioned will put you into touch with most of the sources for book lists which we usually give in our letters, we shall list some of these and others here also. The National Council of Teachers of English, 211 West 68th Street, Chicago 21, has issued at different times delightful annotated book lists, including such titles as "Home Reading" (high school age and useful also for adults), "Leisure Reading" (grades 7, 8, and 9), and "Reading for Fun" (elementary school). Most of its publications are 20-25 cents each. While these published book lists are not new enough to include books of the last three or four years, they make excellent backlogs in any book list collection, and can be supplemented by current reviews, by lists in monthly magazines and in book shops.

The United States Office of Education is another source. Its "500 Books for Children," 15 cents, is an annotated list through the 9th grade, available through the Superintendent of Documents, Washington, D. C. Ask for Office of Education Bulletin 1939 No. 11. A five-cent pamphlet giving inexpensive books for school libraries is another from the same source. It is "Familiar or Less" Leaflet No. 60 (five cents) gives nature reading (fine for camp or vacation days). It is called "Choose a Book About Things To Be Conserved."

The Association for Childhood Education, besides including valuable lists from time to time in its monthly magazine, has a few booklists for 20-25 cents. Two of these are "Children's Books for Fifty Cents or Less" (25 cents), and "A Bibliography of Books for Young Children," 20 cents. The University of Chicago published in 1942 a "Books and Library Reading for Pupils of the Intermediate Grades," at $1.50, very well annotated. Three excellent books on children's reading published by Doubleday Doran, Garden City, New York, are: "What Books for Children?" by Josette Frank of the Child Study Association ($1.50); "Realms of Gold in Children's Books," ($5) and its supplement, "Five Years of Children's Books," ($3.50) both by Bertha E. Mahony and Elinor Whitney. A valuable "Reading Menu—The First Two Years," of poems, stories, lullabies, finger-plays, rhymes, and picture-books, may be found in Clarence W. Sumner's "The Birthright of Babyhood," published by Albert Whitman, Chicago, $1. The list is also extended to add books for "From Two to Five Years." The University of Washington Library, Seattle, has published

Red Sox Oppose Browns In Crucial Fens Series

By Ed Rumill
Sports Editor of The Christian Science Monitor

Not since the early days of the Yankee-Collins-Cronin regime at Fenway Park, when the customers labored under the false impression that the Red Sox represented a challenge to the Yankee kingdom, has the old town seen a series more crucial than the one currently being waged along Jersey Street.

As the Red Sox moved into second place yesterday when they made it 10 straight over the White Sox, 11-0, and only 2½ games separated them from the leading Browns, the single contest today and the doubleheader tomorrow with Luke Sewell were billed as a battle for first place in the American League and held the attention of the entire circuit, East and West.

Pennant Timber
Having snapped out of their slump against the White Sox, the Red Sox once again are red hot contenders. Losing six out of eight to the Senators and Athletics dropped Joe Cronin all the way to fourth place and had the local "told you so's" grinning and nodding their collective heads. But today, as the fans flocked to Fenway, they realized that in this unpredictable American League campaign, the Sox are real pennant timber and worth supporting.

But, of course, to retain the status of a contender, Joe Cronin must beat the Browns. Early today his record against them for 1944 was a poor three won and five lost. The last time the two clubs got together, Luke Sewell took four out of five.

It looked for a while as if Sewell might become as dominating in his league as the Cardinals have in the National. But dropping two out of three at New York helped pull Luke down to his size.

Terry's First

Thus, it seems that there never is anything wrong with the Red Sox that a series with the White Sox cannot cure. They notched their 10th straight over Dykes yesterday in a game which had several features, one of them not so good. It saw Yank Terry win his first game of the season, Pete Fox stretch his hitting streak to 10 games, Bobby Doerr lift his average to .329 and Jimmy Bucher step into the line-up with three hits.

However, the game may have written finish to Oscar Judd's 1944 pitching career at Fenway. The southpaw has had trouble with his pitching shoulder all spring and Cronin's patience must have stretched to the limit. Even though his mates gave him a five-run lead in the first inning, Oscar had to walk off the rubber with nobody out in the third.

Briefs... Tex Hughson says he probably will pitch one of those games against the Browns tomorrow. He already has beaten them once this year. Joe Cronin is toying with the idea of moving Leon Culberson to the other side of the plate. "Culby," it seems, has done a little left-handed hitting and isn't bad at all. Being very fast, his speed would get him more infield hits from that side of the plate. After a bad beginning, the Yankees have bounced back into the flag race. To hold first place by July 4th, the Red Sox would have to sweep this series from the Browns.

The Braves lost another close one last night, 3-2, to the Reds. It was Walters' 13th victory. It looks like Walters and Hughson as lead-off pitchers in the All-Star Game at Pittsburgh. The Yanks have taken seven out of 10 from the Browns. The Phillies showed the Cards a walk by beating them four straight prior to yesterday's game. But the battle in that league has settled to one between the Pirates, Reds, Giants and Dodgers for second place. The scribes already are moaning at the prospect of covering night World Series games at St. Louis.

Hackney Signs

DETROIT, July 1 (AP)—Full-back Elmer Hackney, the "one-man gang" from Kansas State College, is the first holdover player to sign a 1944 contract with the Detroit Lions of the National Football League. Hackney, entering his third season at Detroit and fifth in the league, has a 4-F draft classification.

Samson Is Given Little Chance To

Dethrone Segura

EVANSTON, Ill., July 1 (AP)—One of Notre Dame's tennis stars had a chance—but little more—to "shake down the thunder from the sky" today in the final of the N. C. A. A. net tournament by dethroning Francisco (Pancho) Segura, the University of Miami's scintillating defending champion.

Final obstacle in what has been something of a Maypole dance by the devastating Segura to his second straight singles title was Notre Dame's captain and "lender" star, Charles Samson, of Wichita, Kan.

Also climaxing a week of racket-swinging on Northwestern University's courts, the National Collegiate doubles championship was to be settled today with the University of Texas' defending titlists, John Hickman and Felix Kelley, encountering Nick Buzolich, six-foot, seven-inch basketball center, and Gary Ruby of Pepperdine College (Los Angeles).

Judging by the manner topsided Segura polished off his four victims to date, including his semifinal conquest yesterday of Georgia Tech's Frank Willett, 6-2, 6-1, 6-4, the swarthy Ecuador star should win as he pleases from Samson. However, the Irish captain, who starred at Ohio State before he was fitted to Notre Dame's V-12 unit, gained some stature when he spilled third-seeded Harry Likas of Gonzaga in their semifinal match Thursday.

Only other action yesterday in addition to Segura's drubbing of Willett was the semifinal doubles triumph by Hickman and Kelley over Samson and Jerry Evert of Notre Dame, 7-5, 6-2, 6-3. Buzolich and Ruby gained the final Thursday by eliminating Dick Warner and Bob Lewis of Utah.

By gaining the final, Samson clinched at least a tie by Notre Dame for California's undefeated team title. The losing finalist is awarded two points which with the single point Notre Dame acquired by reaching the doubles semifinals assured the Irish a final total of three points, as many as Segura can win for Miami, or either of the two-man finalists can capture by title triumphs.

Silver Has Also Gone to War

Silver has joined the rest of the metals that fight for victory. True, it is hardly a front-line soldier, serving mainly as a replacement to release more vital metals for active service on the fighting fronts.

Construction of a magnesium plant in southern Nevada called for 100 miles of electric wiring to transmit current for light and power uses. One hundred miles of silver wiring was installed, thus releasing its equivalent in copper for indispensable tasks.

This is not the first time silver has substituted for copper wiring as a conductor of electricity. Silver wiring has already been used in high-power transmission lines in different parts of the country, to release large quantities of copper for tasks no other metal can perform.

Silver ball bearings as replacements for steel bearings have long since passed the experimental stage in many American industrial plants. Industry has also developed a new and easier method by which silver can be electroplated on magnesium to prevent oxidation—as one more contribution to the general speed-up of war production.

A new method for making sea water drinkable depends in part on silver. The addition of silver

Village's Submarine
Seal, Kent

The crew of the British submarine Seal have shown a very concrete way of saying thank you to this tiny village. While the crew were on active service, and during the three and a half years of their captivity as prisoners of war, the villagers sent them letters and parcels of comforts. Reason enough for the firm friendship which grew up between the inhabitants of the village and the submarine crew, who felt that they could almost claim to know each family personally.

Now, the men have collected between £200 and £300 among themselves, and sent it as a gift to Seal village. They have agreed to the suggestion that when the war is over their money shall be put toward a much-needed sports pavilion, and that a plaque shall tell the story.

Home Front Desertion

The problem of "a state of mind" that Generals Marshall and Arnold and Admiral King have laid before President Roosevelt is not insurmountable. America is naturally a land of optimism, and it should never be otherwise. For it is not a soft and unrealistic optimism; it is an optimism of tested strength.

If America is optimistic about the war it is because its factories have done the "miraculous" and because its young men have given vivid denial to those silly claims about democratic softness. And the news from every theater, except Central China, is cheering for the Allies. There is solid reason to expect victory; no one can persuade Americans not to hope it will be an early victory.

What the United States chiefs are worried about, of course, is not this justified optimism; it is the trek—visible for many weeks—of war workers back to jobs offering more postwar promise.

It is virtually impossible, for example, to recruit able men from industry to man the various emergency departments in Washington, though at the outset of the war many were eager to serve for a dollar a year. War plants are finding it increasingly hard to hire new workers, especially women. And the rate of turnover is very serious. It remains to be seen whether the new and more stringent regulations of the War Manpower Commission, which are now going into effect, will help.

Among the more interested readers of the message of the two Generals and the Admiral should be Congressmen now vacationing or campaigning. Specific and detailed Congressional action on postwar reconversion problems, assuring an orderly transition to peacetime economy, would have left workers less anxious and less hasty to make their own postwar provisions.

Mr. Dewey on Tariffs

Governor Dewey has lost no time in reshaping the Republican plank on foreign trade. In his first press conference after being nominated, he endorsed the "Republican reciprocal trade agreement program which Secretary Hull has been carrying out."

Mr. Hull might object that the Republicans have never consistently supported the vital most-favored-nation clause of his reciprocal agreements and that his policy has been carried through Congress only over the repeated opposition of the bulk of the Republicans. But historically Mr. Dewey can cite the McKinley and Taft arguments in favor of reciprocity. And those who recognize that continuance of the effort to break down trade barriers is one of the most practical steps for buttressing world peace with sound economic conditions will not quarrel over party labels.

The wording of the plank adopted at Chicago made it appear that Alf Landon and other Republicans who were working for a more liberal trade policy had lost their battle under the bludgeoning of the traditional protectionists led by former Senator Grundy. For the whole emphasis was on "a fair protective tariff" and the assumption was that imports from any country with lower living standards—that is all countries—are harmful.

The plank seemed to deny the advance that has been made in Republican thinking on tariffs—the growing recognition that trade must be a two-way business and that tariffs tax the great body of consumers for the benefit of certain producers. The plank did have a few words promising to join with other countries—so long as all home industries were protected from foreign competition—to "remove unnecessary and destructive barriers to international trade." It also contained an ambiguous statement that protection against "foreign competition should be modified only by reciprocal bilateral trade agreements approved by Congress." Governor Dewey says the essence of the plank is the promise "to promote international trade in the interest of peace."

The phrase about "agreements approved by Congress" may be interpreted to support continuance of the present method by which Congress does not approve each separate agreement, but grants the Secretary of State authority to make such agreements under certain limitations. We are glad Mr. Dewey seems to interpret it this way. We hope he can persuade his party's representatives in Congress to take the same view. But it may be well to recognize that this entails a very great change in Republican thinking about trade.

Longer Paid Vacations

Two-week vacations with pay for hourly workers, starting about five years' service, promise to be multiplied under the award of the National War Labor Board in the case of the Fulton Iron Works Company of St. Louis. Regional boards are now beginning to grant two weeks, and having made a start, seem likely to issue many such orders.

Ten years ago weekly vacations for hourly workers were rare, though vacations for salaried employees were traditional. The hourly workers began to be given paid vacations, generally one week, shortly before the war in Europe opened. This was on a voluntary basis.

After the United States entered the conflict, the WLB made many one-week awards, which were compulsory. Now the Board is broadening its own vacation policy.

Paid vacations for hourly employees may prove one of the permanent gains for many wage earners coming out of the war.

What Congress May Miss

Recently President Roosevelt transmitted to Congress several of the principal measures adopted by the International Labor Conference at Philadelphia, which he had received. He added that he would later submit its recommendations. There are several important facts regarding the recommendation on State medicine which probably he does not know and will not submit. These include:

The representatives of the United States refrained from voting for the immediate recommendation of State medicine. This furnished the most controversial issue of the conference, and was carried by the enthusiasm of the Latin-American delegations and of the labor group, together with employer delegates from some nations.

Representation of the United States was confined to an employer delegation originating with the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, to workers drawn from the American Federation of Labor, and to Government officials under New Deal auspices. Other workers or industry had no one to speak for them, neither did agriculture.

In time Congress will receive the recommendations of the International Labor Conference, and freely enact or shelve any part of them, precisely as it has picked and chosen among the many recommendations of past years. The proposed program of State medicine goes farther than can now be found in any country. Because of its vast size, the United States has an entirely different problem than any other advanced industrial nation. Congress will certainly pause before voting to introduce any part of a recommendation for quick action, passed largely with the support of Latin-American countries, many of them unable to install as much social security as the United States already has.

Long and Cool

The old oaken bucket is plummeting into disrepute, and in spite of our better judgment, we bemoan the fact. It is not sanitary, says the Department of Labor. But we cannot think that water from a paper cup will ever taste as good as it did from a tin dipper with a bit of rust on it.

Now that the Department of Agriculture has gotten knee-deep in the recruiting of boys, girls, and women to work on farms, the Department of Labor has taken it upon itself to look after the interests of these new farm workers, and has begun to probe with benevolent inquisitiveness into eating, drinking, sleeping accommodations.

It frowns sternly on the open pail of water beneath the elm tree in the hayfield. This must no longer be, says Washington. Instead, there must be some sort of covered container, and the thirsty must use paper cups.

Alas for our day-dreams! No longer can we sit in a hot city office and envy the plowman pulling his team to a halt while he stops for a drink at midmorning. There might, to be sure, be an occasional grasshopper floating on top of the pail of water. Doubtless a leaf or a fleck of dust sometimes blew in on the fragrant wind. But he could take the long-handled dipper and drink deep while his horses jingled the harness as they shook off flies, and the clouds drifted by overhead, and the smell of freshly turned earth filled his nostrils.

Maybe the paper cup won't make any difference. We hope not.

An Ally in Need

The Joseph Tetralogy

The Bookshelf

JOSEPH THE PROVIDER, by Thomas Mann, translated from the German by H. T. Lowe-Porter (New York: Knopf, $3), is by far the greatest of the four Joseph books, a superbly embellished reconstruction of life in ancient Egypt, borrowing for its narrative the climax of one of the best tales ever told.

In this section there is more of the original story to work with, and it is rich in drama. Instead of a few verses, as in the case of some of the other volumes of this tetralogy, the narrative this time is drawn from more than ten chapters of Genesis. Retold is Joseph's career from the time when he was thrown into prison on the false charges of Potiphar's wife, to the burial of Jacob in the cave and the return of Joseph and his brothers to Egypt, the brothers forgiven. Moreover, Mr. Mann is here in two fields that seem particularly absorbing to him: the colorful tapestry of an ancient and noble civilization, and the philosophical gropings of a people in bondage to dark, superstitious beliefs but reaching out for light. Both he treats with mastery.

Probably some will read this novel as they read other works of fiction—primarily for the story. Yet the story as found in Genesis is limp and clear and far more beautiful. Indeed, while the narrative weaves its troubled path through Mann's supplementary architecture, it is often all but lost sight of.

But the background is fascinating. With a picture of Joseph on the Nile boat being taken to prison, one steps into a dark and glittering land of records on tombs suddenly come alive, where pharaohs and slaves are no longer mummies and figurines, where a shining river rules like a god, and an insistent political and business activity is whimsically modern.

Thomas Mann brings to his work of recreating the setting of this impelling adventure story the distinguished scholarship and depth of mind that one has come to expect of this greatest of contemporary German writers. As with the earlier Joseph books, so here, the background is authentic and convincing. That it does not outweigh the story is basically because the story is simple, and eternal in its spiritual message.

At times, however, the going is heavy. The pharaoh is depicted as a winning, eager boy, but the long philosophical conversations between him and Joseph badly hamper the progress of the novel.

The characters of Joseph, Judah, and the concubine Tamar (who is presented in an oddly thrust-in detour of pastoral and presumably symbolic narrative) are the best drawn. Many of the others on this vast canvas are mere symbols, yet have a certain importance in creating an atmosphere of prophecy.

Throughout, Mr. Mann injects personal comment which adds to the air of ancient storytelling, as if he were a character in the prologue of Hardy's "Dynasts," watching with mingled compassion, amusement, and reverence the men and women of this drama.

One feels that whatever else Thomas Mann writes, this tetralogy will stand as a symbol of his distinguished contribution to twentieth-century literature. M. J. T.

Mirror of World Opinion

Eire's Responsibility

Many Canadians of Irish descent must have felt embarrassed, if not ashamed, because of the attitude of their ancestral land (south of the Ulster border) towards the present war. The Irish have many national characteristics, both amiable and the reverse, but neutrality is not naturally one of them. Even virtual political separation from the ancient enemy, England, has not brought internal peace to the troubled land. . . .

Young as a self-governing nation, Eire may be politically immature, unready to accept the fact that nationhood carries responsibilities as well as sovereign rights. It is not fitting for Canadians to censure her too severely, when we remember that if certain of our politicians had had their way, Canada might even now be sharing Eire's shame as a neutral. —Minneapolis (Manitoba) Tribune.

Soviets Permit Profits

The Wide Horizon

By Helen Ross
National Research Bureau

Soviet Russia permits the establishment of small businesses for profit as an aid toward reconstruction in areas liberated from the fascists. While it was never disallowed by law, not since the inception of the Five-Year Plan in 1928 have small businesses flourished in Russia.

Recently, the Kiev Pravda officially announced that any willing citizen may start a small business. Immediately, several private enterprises sprung up while plans for others came to the fore. In a socialist nation, this is a revolutionary tendency. While only a temporary expediency, the plan to allow business to exist for profit is based on individualist motives rather than on Marxist collectivism.

Among the Soviet people, according to direct reports from Russia, there is a feeling that if peace and security are to prevail, everyone must be put to work and the production of all goods must be increased. Certain forces are already at work planning ahead. As in the past, the Soviet Union is solving its problems by turning to the experiences of the post-civil-war days.

Then, much of the Union's industries were in enemy hands or were destroyed. Transportation broke down. The drought set in. Technicians, tied to old Russia's private industrial elements, fled to other nations. Within the country counter-revolutionaries offered resistance, while other nations isolated the Soviet Union. A slow condition of economic stagnation set in.

In 1921, Lenin outlined plans for a New Economic Policy to induce increases in the food supply and commodity goods and bring about a revival of industrial activity. He showed that to rebuild the Nation's economic life it was necessary to forego temporarily the program of building socialism.

Under his plan, basic industries, such as transport, communications, power stations, and foreign trade, were to remain State monopolies. But limited concessions were to be made to private capitalism.

This compromise with capitalist tendencies was a tactical retreat during which the country could train its own technicians and build the reserve for industrial socialism; this prepared for the Five-Year Plan and the elimination of private enterprise.

The New Economic Policy accomplished its purpose by setting the wheels of industry and trade going and by accumulating a reserve of food and consumer goods. By 1926, production reached the pre-1914 level.

Today, as their newspapers and reports of U. S. officials show, the Soviet government is encouraging individuals to open small enterprises for private profit. By permitting the exploitation of shrewdness and ability, it will not be long before market places and stores will overflow with merchandise.

The plan today operates very simply. Aided by the authorities, a business operator rents space, buys his merchandise, hires help, and conducts his business for his own best interests. Already restaurants have been established by securing space in a co-operative or factory on a concession basis.

A restaurateur makes his own arrangements for equipment and fixtures. He hires cooks, waiters and waitresses, cashiers, and porters. He then makes his food purchases from farmers who raise more products than they need to cover their requirements.

A group of Ukrainian veterans is planning a tobacco factory. Small factories manufacturing essential clothes are springing up. Shoemakers are taking orders for shoes. Building tradesmen are getting together to manufacture construction supplies for houses and factories. Soon electricians, plumbers, home decorators, printers, and many others will be in their own small businesses.

There is a great need for clothing and knit goods, furniture, building supplies and lumber, farm implements, wagons, kitchen utensils, stationery, toys, and recreational facilities. It will not be long before Soviet citizens will be engaged in this work.

How the Convention Did It

An Intimate Message from Chicago

By Erwin D. Canham

Returning from the Republican Convention

Nothing is more significant about this week's political doings than the striking difference between their beginning and their end. When we arrived in Chicago, defeatism gripped the whole Convention. Delegates were assembled to ratify a foregone conclusion. And many of them were far from happy about that particular conclusion. They felt he had been "put over" on them in some not very clearly defined manner. They had doubts about November. But at the end, the situation was very substantially reversed. Defeatism has turned into confidence and enthusiasm, and the campaign gets off to an excellent start. What was responsible for this political achievement? Here are some of the factors:

First, in point of time at least, was the sense of power and confidence generated by so many Republican office-holders (not aspirants) assembled together in one place. It was an in-office, not an out-of-office, Convention. With 26 states having Republican administrations, covering three-fourths of the electoral votes, it was obvious that assurance would grow. There's a big difference between being in the wilderness and being in the City Hall. Of course, in some of these states, the local officials are far from certain they can carry the state against the Roosevelt ticket. But they have gained confidence from association.

Second, the ticket itself has bred unity and strength. There was a lot of incipient Bricker support among the rank-and-file delegates. He made a genuine appeal to the "regular" politicians, for he had conducted an effective nation-wide campaign for the nomination. Some delegates resented being rushed at caucuses Sunday and Monday into unanimous votes for Dewey. And Gov. Bricker's dashing figure, sportingly withdrawing his name in a great old-fashioned speech, clinched their views.

Third came the appearance of Governor Dewey himself. His first few sentences Wednesday night captured most of the Convention, and his speech as a whole convinced them that he was their best available choice. His well-known air of confidence was never better modulated, more tactfully restrained, or more suited to the occasion. The charming and modest Mrs. Dewey, seen both on the rostrum and at a huge reception afterward, completed the picture of youth and appeal.

Finally, Governor Dewey set out at once to placate and enlist the party "regulars" who were not very tactfully treated by the nominee in 1940, and who had some doubts about this second New Yorker. He gave gracious deference to Governor Bricker's views, sought to see some leader from each state, and at his press conference stressed again the need of achieving maximum unity within the party through his "area of agreement" policy.

Thus a flat and dubious prospect has been turned into a buoyant and confident outlook. Perhaps the chances of defeating President Roosevelt are no whit better than they were a week ago. But the Republican delegates think they are. And it is clear that many mistakes have been avoided, if only by a narrow margin.

One of these great mistakes is the danger of bringing the war into the campaign. Governor Warren, the keynoter, and Governor Dewey sought clearly and vigorously to keep the war out. Representative Luce brought it in with both hands in her evocation of "G. I. Jim." So outspoken has been the criticism of that part of her speech from influential Republicans that it is unlikely this mistake will be made responsibly again. One faction, represented by bitter isolationists, and by some who advocate an early and compromise peace, would try to prey on parental love for political advantage. But the vast majority of the party condemns them.

On the positive side, perhaps the most striking aspect of the Dewey technique is the "area of agreement" policy. Readers of this column will remember many references here in the past to the wisdom of emphasizing the things that unite us, rather than our differences of opinion. And now this fundamental becomes the second big plank of the Dewey platform—the first being the accent on youth. As long as "area of agreement" does not become dodging, or ambiguity, it has profound merits. It is the high road to national unity. And in these days, as Governor Dewey truly said, there are powerful forces seeking to divide us. As long as he does not hesitate to express his own basic convictions—as in his tariff statement—then the agreement policy becomes the one way to bring together a majority party in the United States.

Historically, both Republican and Democratic parties have been coalitions of divergent but ally-able groups. It is the only way party government can work here. Undoubtedly President Roosevelt will try to do much the same thing.

Anyway, in the youth platform, in the unity theme, the Republicans have the basis for an effective campaign. They go ahead with new hope.

Japanese-Americans' Loyalty Demonstrated?

Released by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., 30 Rockefeller Plaza, New York 20

Contrary to a widely-held belief, there has not been one proved case of sabotage or espionage by a Japanese-American, either in this country or Hawaii, since the beginning of the war. Carey McWilliams, former Commissioner of Immigration of the State of California, points out in a 32-page pamphlet study, "What About Our Japanese-Americans?" made public by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., and the American Council, Institute of Pacific Relations, both of New York City.

In this new Public Affairs Pamphlet, Mr. McWilliams, author of "Factories in the Field" and "Brothers Under the Skin," presents a summary of the results of two years of intimate study of the issues raised by the evacuation, relocation, and segregation of Japanese-Americans. The pamphlet is illustrated by Taro Yashima, noted anti-fascist artist.

The complete findings of Mr. McWilliams' two-year study will be issued in book form by the Institute of Pacific Relations this fall. The Japanese-Americans who are now being resettled and given employment in various parts of the country are men and women who have proved their loyalty beyond any question, Mr. McWilliams reveals. Americans of Japanese ancestry have been "screened" repeatedly to test their loyalty.

First, the FBI kept a close check on "dangerous individuals" for at least several years prior to Pearl Harbor, and such persons were promptly arrested on December 7, both in Hawaii and on the mainland, and placed in special detention camps.

Second, after the evacuation of some 110,000 persons of Japanese descent to relocation centers, the War Relocation Authority sifted out the so-called "disloyal" elements and segregated them at Tule Lake. Actually, according to Mr. McWilliams, only a small proportion of this group may be regarded as disloyal.

The record of the more than 19,000 Japanese-Americans who have left the relocation centers for normal homes and jobs has fully demonstrated their loyalty. The pamphlet concludes that "if the relocation program is ended at an early date, with most of the evacuees relocated outside the centers, the program itself will show constructive results despite the hardships, expense, and needless suffering which it has involved."

As further confirmation of the loyalty of the Japanese-Americans in relocation centers and of the potentialities of the relocation program for democracy, Mr. McWilliams points to facts such as the following:

There are now more than 8,000 Japanese-Americans in the Army. Some of them, like Sergeant Kazuo Komoto and Fred Nishitsujii, have been cited for gallantry. Sergeant Ben Kuroki has taken part in over twenty-five combat flights over Europe and wears the Air Medal with four Oak Leaf Clusters.

The evacuees inside the centers have purchased war bonds; conducted drives for the Red Cross; organized volunteers-for-victory committees; made radio transmissions for the OWI; and, within the limitations of detention, have done all in their power to further the war effort.

Young Nisei—American-born citizens of Japanese-immigrant parentage—are "moving out into the main stream of American life . . . and, in many fields, are demonstrating an alert awareness of the kind of world in which they live."

It is a healthy sign for America, Mr. McWilliams concludes, "that the Japanese problem, which has echoed on the West Coast for nearly fifty years, has now ceased to be a local and has become a national problem . . . definitely related to the problem of the other racial minorities. This is important since it is evident that we shall never solve any of these problems until we have solved all of them."
